Schmidt campaign to reform EEC finances

From Michael Hornsby Venice, June 12

Venice, June 12

Herr Helmur Schmidt, the West German Chancellor, fired the opening shots today in what is expected to be a sustained campaign over the next two years to get the EEC to put its financial house in order and reduce the costly agricultural surpluses.

The Chancellor signalled his intention in a brief meeting with Mrs Margaret Thatcher before they joined other EEC heads of government at the start of a two-day summit meeting here on the island of Sau Giorgio Maggiore facing the Doge's pelace across the Grand

The settlement last month of The settlement ask month of Britain's budget grievances has restored West Germany to its traditional position as the big-gest net contributor to EEC revenue. This year West Germany expects to pay £1,050m, rising to £1,200m in 1981, com-pared with £370m and £445m for Britain.

Herr Schwidt told Mrs Thatcher that while Boun accepted the Brussels compromise reducing Britain's con-tribution there had to be a fairer sharing of the cost and a restructuring of the EEC's

As part of the Brussels settle-ment, the European Commission was asked to put forward proposals by the beginning of June next year for correcting im-balances in the Community's spending priorities.

The Germans see the summit the Germans see the summit here as an opportunity to steer the Commission's deliberation along certain lines. Germany has frequently complained about the waste involved in the Com-Agricultural Policy, but has tiways failed to translate such complaints into action, mainly because of opposition from its farming lobby.

However, the German delegation insisted here today that Born wants measures to hold the growth rare of agricultural spending below that of the Community's own revenue resources, which are based on customs duties and levies and value added tax levied at a maximum rate of 1 per cent.

It is calculated that if agricultural costs continue to in-crease at their present rate the 1 per cent VAT limit could be reached by the end of next year. Germany has said that it would not agree to raise that limit without financial reform. The German Government has also said that it wants these reforms, including curbs on non agricultural spending to be reflected in the EEC's budget for 1982 so that the saving can take effect at the beginning of that year. Even more controversially, the Germans want the summit to discuss putting a cailing on net receipts from the Community budget as well as on net payments into it.

The special relationship between Germany and France was highlighted today at a meeting between 'President Giscard d'Estaing and Herr Schmidt before the summit began. It is thought the two leaders discussed Herr Schmidt's forthcoming trip to Moscow and the result of the French President's recent meeting with Mr Brezhrecent meeting with Mr Brezh-nev in Warsaw. They were also reported to have touched on the succession to Mr Roy European Commission.

The heads of government are expected to adopt tomorrow a new statement of EEC policy on the Middle East. The phraseology of this document was being discussed here tonight by foreign ministers of the Nine.

Manuscript secured for nation by museum

A sensationally successful coup on behalf of the national heritage was achieved by the Gilbert White Museum of Selborne, Hampshire, yesterday when it bid £100,000 at Christie's to secure the final manuscript draft of Gilbert White's Natural History of Selborne. This was the masterwork of Selborne's naturalist vicar in the 1780s a work whose vicar in the 1780s, a work whose renown has lasted to the pre-sent day.

The operation to secure the manuscript for Selborne has been mounted in the space of a formight. Lord Selborne, a trustee of the museum together with Dr June Chatfield, its curator, and other interested locals, wrote a letter to The Times of May 29. They explained the special interest of the manuscript and appealed for help since they had no money to buy it. As a result offers of assistance poured in from England and abroad.

The museum said yesterday that it was indebted to the generosity of hundreds of individuals, several charitable trusts, Hampshire County County cil, the National Manuscripts Fund, the National Heritage Fund, and Mitchell Beszley for grants lowards the purchase. Henry Sotheran Ltd, the London booksellers, also donated its services, advising on the technicalities of the purchase and doing the bidding.

The Army is planning to withiraw another battalion from Northern Ireland next month. It will be the second significant reduction in force levels this

Nearly 1,000 troops, including one main unit, returned in the spring to bring down the number serving there to about 12,170, the lowest total since the summer of 1971. Another full unit will nor be replaced when it ends its fourmonth emergency tour in Ulster in July. The effect will be that a battalion of the parttime Ulster Defence Regiment (UDR) will take over the job of supporting the Royal Ulster Constabulary (RUC) in the area of Lurgan, Craigavon and Portamove reflects Government's policy of lighten-ing the burden of Northern Ireland service on the Army as the security position improves.

The ultimate objective is to end the four-month tours alport for the police will be provided entirely by the UDR in permanent accommodation. The length of a garrison posting 18 months to two years to help to make that possible.

The four-menth tours have had a disruptive effect on training and on family life and have even thinned down the front line in Germany, where the British Army of the Rhine (BAOR) has had to supply up to Seven units at a time to keep the system going.

Four months in Ulster has meant up to nine months taken out of a soldier's year because of the need to train and retrain for the differen roles of oppos-ing the Russians and the IRA. By the end of next month, however, the Army will have only five four-month battalions in the province, one fewer than the number of permanent garri-sons for the first time since

Meanwhile, work has started on yet another permanent bar-racks at Portadown, where a seventh garrison should be established in about two years' on a programme of more road closures along the border in a further attempt to make life difficult for terrorists. But the Army and the RUC are anxious not to alienate the Garda, whose cooperation and efficiency has improved since Mr Charles Haughey came to power Dublin.

With its discussion paper on Northern Ireland due to be published in a few weeks' time, the Government is equally anxious not to upset Protestant politicians by running down the force levels too quickly. That also could have the effect of encouraging the IRA.

Miners' pledge to fight pit closure plans By Our Labour Editor the industry's joint review

Miners' leaders yesterday reaffirmed their policy of opposition to pit closures except on grounds of exhaustion of reserves, and promised to fight "premature" closures. The executive committee of the National Union of Mine-

Why can't anyone overtake the Cortina?

Many a car has challenged the Cortina.

Many a car has fallen by the wayside. Why is it that no one can even approach its popularity let alone overtake it?

It's a question of balance. You might find one car that can match its speed, or another that can match its space, but when you look at the whole picture - fuel economy, service costs, parts, insurance, depreciation - no car is quite so completely satisfying.

That's the genius of the Cortina, and the engineers who designed it.

It's fast but it isn't thirsty. It's economical to run, but it isn't dull to drive.

It handles well, but it doesn't have a hard uncomfortable ride.

As a piece of engineering it's perfectly balanced.

Who can keep up with it?

By no means everyone. The Cortina has more than enough acceleration to overtake quickly and decisively on country roads. And to cruise effortlessly at motorway speed limits.

The Cortina only needs a full service once every 12,000 miles, with a minor service every 6,000 miles. Ford parts are moderately priced and the dealer network covers the country. How many cars of this size cost as little to keep on the road?

About 2,100 state secrets will be disclosed tomorrow with the publication of the names of those included in the Queen's 1930 Birthday Honours list. Only the recipients should know in advance; and even they are likely to be unaware of the small, but extraordinarily complex industry which produces the visible signs of their distinctica.

The entire operation which ensures that the requisite numbers of medals and insigma are ready for the larer occasion when the Queen confers the awards is in the hands of the Central Chancery of the Orders of Knighthood. That discreet office is elegantly and fittingly accommodated in a section of St James's Palace and is headed Major-General Desmond

Who gets what is ultimately the responsibility of the Prime Minister in her capacity as Minister for the Civil Service, and it is the Ceremonial Branch of the Civil Service Department that coordinates policy and re-commendations for honours.

The task of delivering the medals and insignia is eased for the Central Chancery by the fact that almost all awards are subject to a quota determined by an honours committee on which senior civil servants and officers of the Armed Services sit. Adjustments are made from time to time, as for example when the present Prime Minister reintroduced awards for political services.

Thus it emerges that the trappings of public recognition are ordered on average a year in advance of their distribution. which usually means rather ahead of the time when the eventual recipients are singled out for them.

In terms of numbers, the bulk of the work is done by the Royal Mint, which has a factory at Liantrisant in South Wales. The Mint is in the coining business, and medals are essentially coins with clasps and ribbons attached. Nearly all medals for merit and for gallantry, as well as for special events like a coronation or a jubilee, come from the Mint.

On insignia like those of the OBE and MBE, the Mint shares the work with six private

EEC 'claiming £500m of British fish'

By Ronald Kershaw Northern Industrial

The fight for Britain to retain a bigger share of the fish taken from her waters by EEC countries will take on a new significance at next week's meeting of the EEC Fisheries Council.

The view of the British industry is that British fish worth about £700m a year at present values is at stake, about the same amount as the rebate on Britain's budget so reluctantly conceded recently.

British fishermen have no doubt that next week's meeting will prompt other EEC states to attempt to recover most of that rebate in fish.

and more individual attention was the usual answer given by teachers on how to improve standards. That was plausible enough if those three things went together, he said. But an inquiry in another country where the number of outils was falling showed that the reaction of teachers was to have more free periods, not smaller classes. Furthermore, the reason why the research evidence about the value of small classes was so disappointing might be that small classes had not resulted in effective individual attention. A simpler way of increasing the opportunities for individual attention would be to create more situations where children suggested. Children gained deeper understanding if they had to pass on to others what they had learnt. He criticized the narrow experience most teachers had of life. Preference in recruiting teachers should be given to mature students who had bad experience in other occupations, he suggested. Putting back into schools young men and women who had left school only three or four years earlier was not satisfactory.

Sir Charles seemed to favour a general first degree, followed by a one-year postgraduate teacher training course in pref-erence to the three or four-year BEd course, in part because the former would make possible a more flexible response to fluctuations in pupil numbers.

But the postgraduate course needed to be reformed, and all teacher training needed to be linked more closely with schools, he said.

Less crime by children but 'more locked up'

There were fears that that would result in more children being taken into care.

Outdoor schools plan ds called for young offenders

Mr Mark Carlisle, Secretary

But the minister, while dmitting that juvenile crims "was one of the major social problems we face today", told a conference in Birmingham he was sceptical that prolonged stims in such establishments could help to stop the growth in juvenile delinquency.

Paris, June 12

Seven people were injured, two seriously, and about £100,000 worth of damage was caused by a 51b bomb which blew up in a left luggage locker at Orly airport early today.

Responsibility for the blast was later claimed in an anonymous telephone call to a news agency on behalf of "The Direct Action Organization of March 27-28".

Those were the dates this year when French police rounded up 34 suspected terror ists, including several Italians wanted in connexion with the murder of Signor Aldo Moro. Since then there have been a series of attacks and raids carried out on computers and property connected with trans-port in France.

M Joel le Theule, the Minister of Transport, issued a state-ment after the Orly explosion saying: "Such attacks against public installations constructed for passengers are inadmissible. No justification can be greated. no guaranteeron can be gaven, no explanation can be accepted. Their cowardice has caused very sad consequences to innocent victims."

Apart from Orly the other attacks claimed by the group have been on computer offices in Toulouse used by the Ministry of Transport, on the ministry offices in Paris (with the base of the part of the eleca bazooka) and on the elec-tricity cables serving the main line between Bordeaux and the Italian border.

The group made its first claim of an attack in France in May of last year and since then it has made about 15 others.

Of those arrested, 19 have been charged before the Court of State Security and it has been shown that there is a connexion between various urban guerrilla movements in Europe. The prosecutor also asked today for a fine of 100,000 guilders (about £22,500) to "strike symbolically at Mr Menten's fortune", much of which he is said to have acquired during the war.

According to the prosecutor there could be no doubt that Mr Menten was involved on July 7, 1941, in the execution of between 20 and 30 Polish nationals, mainly Jews, in the small village of Podgorodtsy, which at the time was in German-occupied Poland and is now part of the Ukraine.

There could be no question of confusion between Mr Menten and his brother Dirk. The prosecutor said it was "highly curious" that Mr Menten had suddenly come out last month with the accusation that his brother was responsible for the mass murders three-and-a-balf years after his first trial started. "We know that the Einsatz Kommando of Dr Schöngarth. to which Mr Menten was seconded, murdered 6.000 people in July and Auguast, 1941. Boy's kidnapping stuns the people of Israel

From Christopher Walker Jerusalem, June 12

The recent abduction of an eight-year-old Jewish boy has had a traumatic effect on a society which was founded on idealism and has not yet come to terms with the rapid growth violent and organized crime in its midst.

The kidnspping comes whe there is an upsurge of both Arab and Jewish terrorism inside Israel, an increase in armed robberies, and disturbing evidence of highly organized protection rackets in the big resort towns.

The Eidnapoing took place on Sunday when Oron Yarden, the son of a company director, was seized near his home outside Tel Aviv. Almost totally inexperienced in kidnspping cases, the Israeli police bungled an operation in which the gang escaped with a £20,000 ransom without return-

Russians rely on West for news, report says

By Gabriel Ronay reany Russians — and not celly dissidents — are tuning in to Western radio stations to find out what is going on in the world and in the Soviet Union.

In a speech broadcast on all television and radio according to the new constitution and the handing over of power to a democratically-elected government.

They have come to rely on fereign broadcasts because of more objective reporting, according to a candid Moscow document appraising the impact of Western broadcasts. The samisdat (underground) document, entitled Foreign Erocacasts in Russian — Some Advice and Requests, was com-piled by Mr Viktor Nekipelov and Mr Feliks Serebrov, two prominent members of the dwindling band of Soviet human rights activists.

They assert that the most important function of Western broadcasts is that "they enable the people (of Russia) to hear news about themselves". And this, they assert, is not only their own or their friends' crinion: "We are expressing the opinion not just of our dissident circle but of a host of other listeners in various corners of the Soviet Union". In assessing the "immense importance" of foreign broadcasts in Russian, they hint at that the Soviet press cannot.

They would like to hear reading in Russian and in other languages of the Soviet Union of the "Universal Declaration of the Rights of Man" and other such documents " because they have never been published in the general (Soviet) press". Commentaries on the Soriet

Constitution and on historical themes, would also be welcome.

They find the BBC's Glance into the Past a most enjoyable programme in this context, and urge more current affairs reperts too.

The authors, however, appear to find it necessary to empha-size that "excessively laudatery" programmes of all things Western are counter-productive because Soviet listeners are bembarded with propagandist programmes by the Soviet media. Thirty-six intellectuals and academics from Belgrade called on the Government to grant an amnesty to all prisoners sen-tenced for verbal criticism of the Yugoslav regime.

The petition which was addressed to the eight-member Presidency of the state, was signed by a number of prominent personalities. They included Mr. Srdan Popovic, a lawyer, who has defended many political offenders, Mr Mica Popovic, a painter, whose recent exhibition caused an official uproar, several writers and university professors, mostly from the faculties of philosophy and

Mr Milovan Diilas, Yugoslavia's most noted dissident and a former close associate of the late President Tito, endorsed the petition although he did not actually sign it on advice of petitioners, who felt that his special position would have given it too great a political

England suffer more from stoppage

From Norman Fox Football Correspondent Turin, June 12 England 1, Belgium 1

England 1, Belgium 1

Belgium, too obviously playing for nothing more than a draw, effectively spoilt England's European Championship prospects here in the violently uncomfortable Stadio Comunale this afternoon. A five-minute interruption caused by fighting English supporters on sparsely occupied terraces was equally to blame for ruining what, at that point after half an hour, was beginning to be an interestwas beginning to be an interest-ing, if always difficult march for

It is never easy to assess the psychological effects of external disturbances on players, but there the rioting — and the tear $23 that stung their eyes and was the cause of the stoppage — marked the point at which the game bethe point at which the game be-gan to deteriorate, England had the more ambitious approach against a five-man defence and they suffered the more. However, they could claim some sympathy when the referee belatedly re-fused a noal after the lineman. fused a goal after the linesman flagged for offside but was not sure enough to stand his ground, the referee, under pressure from Belgian players, intervened upheld his colleague's first

After two placid and uncompro-mising opening matches yesterday it was particularly sad that this game that held signs of improvement was so miserably scarred by the ugly behaviour of the Eng-land supporters whose fighting on the terraces forced the Italian authorities to use gas

Clemence, at the troublesome end of the stadium, had to ask for the game to be stopped while the gas cleared. Ron Greenwood, the England manager, came on to the pitch to support Clemence's request to which the referee acceded, allowing the players to leave the field acceded, allowing the players to leave the field.

All of this came after 30 minutes, when the match was attractively poised at 1—1. England had enjoyed the greater amount of possession but suffered some Belgium tackling that endangered the immediate futures of both Johnson, who was heavily impeded from behind by Millecamps, and Keegan, Keegan's darting runs behind the England attack were the most constructive features of their early play. Wilkins again showed his splendid attitude to a high class of football by ensuring that the Belgians were not allowed to succeed with their favourite tactic of rapid breakaways.

The violence on the terraces seemed to begin when the Italians seemed to begin when the Italians cheered the Belgium goal but whatever the truth of that, the centre should have been better cheered the Belgium goal but whatever the truth of that, the game itself was hadly affected by the five-minute delay. England retained the upper hand but, with Brooking unable to create opportunities and the Belgium defenders keeping a firm grip on Johnson and Woodcock, one begad to wonder whether another opportunity would arise.

In an attempt to gain a more positive frame of mind in the attack, England decided to take off Johnson after 63 minutes and promote Keegan to the front line. Without doubt, England needed something out of the ordinary to take the victory they badly needed, but, especially in the second half, they rarely looked saything but functional. The promise of parts of the first half faded and when confusion between a linesman and the West German referes deprived England of a good looking goal, the situation became distinctly uneasy.

The Belgians, although not as lively as they had been in a qualifying 3-1 defeat of Scotland, had enough of the game for England to need a much larger margin of safety. Sure enough, three minutes later, they equalized when the England defence fasted to clear a corver. Van der Eycken, who spent much of the match hammering at Keegan's legs, moved up into the penalty area and stabbed at a loose ball. When he failed to make proper contact, Ceuleman's

Nothing secret about Lions as they prepare for Test

From Richard Streeton Bloemfontein, June 12 There were audible rumbles of discord between British and South

They concerned the meeting that the South Africans have requested with François Palmade, the French referee, to dismane, the relations of certain laws. rultimate | Lancashire are treated with cavalier contempt

MANCHESTER: Worcestershire beat Lancaslure by 45 runs. Gorging themselves in a feast of free strokeplay, with Turner and Neale revellers-in-chief, Worcestershire enjoyed themselves hugely at Old Trafford and romped into a home Benson and Hedges semifinal match with Essex. The sun shone for a golden hour before lunch as Glenn Turner, for whom the summer has already brought several rich harvests, made hay with the Lancashire bowling.

His sustained onslaught, which in Hogg's first over brought 76 runs from 51 deliveries within the hour, was laced with 12 scorching

This was not the slightly manic Turner of the West Indies match. This was calculated, skilled fero-city, with the Lancashire bowlers treated with cavalier contempt. Reidy's tendency to pitch short received the most brutal attention. Some deliveries were treated by Turner so brusquely that it recalled Cardus or the imperious Maclaren. He did not strike the ball, he dismissed it from his presence, 36 coming in four Reidy overs.

After lunch Jekyll took over from Hyde, Turner decorously put down his anchor against Hughes and Simmons, and Neale took over the anack to suc heffect that he almost overtook the New Zealander. Neale was dropped behind the wicket by Scott off Simmons when he was 59, but this was he only mistake in splendid innings, less frenetically skilled than Turner's.

Turner reached his hundred out of 187, his fourth century of the season in 110 minutes. He then decided to throw his bat again, hit Hogg straight for six, and then aimed a somewhat tired swipe at Reidy and was bowled. The second wicket had reaped 191 runs, and Neale went serenely on to his hundred, scored in 120 minutes. Hemsley went cheaply, but it was a brief respite since Young came in full of runs and running, and he and Neale turned singles into twos with elordest sprinting between the wickets. They garnered 56 in eight overs before Neale finally colled it a day at 128 and boisted the persevering Simmons to Cockbain.

Simmons to Cockbain.

Lanceshire were left to get 315, a monumental rask requiring the highest-ever Benson and Hedges winning total by a side batting second. Without the gangling menace of Clive Lloyd, Lancashire's task was forbidding. Lloyd was bowled in the first over by Alleyne, of Barbados and latterly Rochdale, and the simation became virtually hopeless when Kennedy touched an outswinger from the hostile Tileyne to the wicketkeeper. Hayes, batting with the studied circumspection of the first day of a championship match, was bowled off stump by Inchmore.

Mubarak's daring finds the boundaries

CAMBRIDGE: The West Indians, with eight first innings wickets in hand, lead Combined Universities by 10 runs. hand, lead Combined Universities by 10 runs.

Combined Universities, with Mubazak contributing a dashing 86 made 208 for four before declaring at 10 minutes to four yesterday. In the late afternoon and evening sunshine the West Indians came in at the end of the first of a two-day match having made a handful more runs from 14 fewer overs, with Bacchus 78 not out and Rowe 5 3not out. In the morning when Deryck Murray had won the toss and invited the Universities to bat, it was hazy and dull. Thunderstorms had circled Cambridge on the previous evening and though the city got all lightly, more rain, said the forecasters, could be expected. Well, the prophets got it wrong and when the sun came to drench Fenner's the scene was set perfectly.

to drench Fenner's the scene was set perfectly.

It was the more appetising because the Universities got away to a surprisingly good sunt, and that was entirely due to the enterprise and excellence of Cambridge's opening batsman, the Sri Lankan Mubarak. The pitch looked a beauty and bore the stamp of Cyril Coote, now retired custodian and to whom a suitable presentation was made recalling his 45 years service.

With Roberts, Croft, Marshall

admirable Mubarak. Slightly built and harless Mubarak stood easily at the crease and in so doing gave no hint of the tiger that lay crouched behind that bland exterior, ready to pounce.

When Mills was defeated by a fast, short pitched ball from Croft, and caught at forward short leg. Mubarak had made 10, and from here on, along the course of 24 overs until lanchcon, Mubarak dominated the most pleasurable passage of the day. While the West Indians searched for catches that never came, Mubarak's deriog helped him find the boundaries.

There were 10 assorted cuts, drives and leg glauces in his half century. At the other end Ezekowitz seemed unmoved and immovable and was hard put to it to make six runs in 12 overs.

At luncheon these two were there still, Mubarak SI, Ezekowitz 12, with the Universities at 106 for one from 30 overs. So far, Mubarak had faitered but once when, having beautifully square cut Croft to the boundary, he all but chopped the same bowler on to his stumps.

Alas poor Mubarak fell short the boundaries.

Alas poor Mubarak fell short of what would have been a memorable hundred, in the second over of the afternoon when he was caught at slip off the persevering Croft. He had hit his 86 runs off 116 balls in 138 minutes. The and King swooping down in close formation, courage as well as witz eased himself out of his shilly would be necessary if the bowlers. These qualities and more were to be found in the content of the shill making 32 runs off 39 overs, and Pringle mounted a spirited himself out of the bowlers. These qualities and innings hitting time boundaries in an excellent half century.

Feaver has a place in team to play Romania

By Rex Bellamy
John Lioyd, who played singles for Britain in eleven consecutive Davis Cup ties from 1976 to 1979 has been replaced by John Feaver for the tie against Romania, to be played on grass at Bristol from today untal Sunday. Lloyd has lost the knack of winning and is so drained of confidence that Paul Hurchins, the national team manager, simply had to find an alternative. Feaver, aged 28, was the obvious choice. He has a "big" game, the kind a grass court demands; and on recent form should win at least one singles. In Feaver's only previous tie, also against Romania, he lost both his singles on a clay court in Bucharest three years ago.

Britain's other singles player will be the consistent Christopher Mottram, and John Lloyd will join his brother David for the doubles. The Romanian number one will be like Nastase, who was suspended from the competition for a year after his offensive behaviour in that 1977 the with Britzin. Seven years ago Nastase was the best player in the world but at the age of 33 he has become a moody virtnoso better thoown as an entertainer than as but at the age of 33 he has become a moody virtuoso better Bot's cup matches. But it does not seem likely that Nastase can win both his singles and also carry Romania through the doubles.

Romania's second singles player should have been Florin Segarceaun but he has had to drop out because of illness. So Andrei Diran, a big chap who has just had his 21st birthday, will play two singles matches and probably the doubles too. This afternoon Feaver will play Diran and Mottram will then take on Nastase. It would be no surprise if Britain won both matches and then achieved a winning 3—0 lead by taking manorrow's doubles. Even if Britain are restricted to a 2—1 lead, Mottram should see them through by beating Diran in the first of Sunday's reverse singles.

If all should depend on the last match, Feaver would face the formidable task of beating Nastase. The Davis Cup competition, the team championship of men's teams, used to be one of the isolated peaks of the tennis year but it no longer dominates the fixture list as it used to. To put the Bristol the in perspective, Britain needs to beat Romania and then either Czechoslovakia or France in order to qualify for a tie with Argentina in the semi-final round.

The draw is: (Today, 1.30) John Lloyd and David Lloyd v Nastase and Dirau (Sunday, 1.30) Mottram v Dirau; Buster Mottram v Hie Nastase, (Tomorrow, 2.30) John Lloyd and David Lloyd v Nastase and Dirau (Sunday, 1.30) Mottram v Dirau; Feaver v Nastase.

Victor Pecci of Paragray, who is seeded fifth and was runner up last year at Queen's, almost lost in the second round yesterday because he lost his calma. The lineswoman did not call and the unpire did not overrule her, though most of the spectators considered the ball to be out. The tlebreak score at the time was 4—4, and Dent now lead 5—4. Pecci is not a volcanic type, but he almost erupted and lost the tiebreak 6—8. With that he lost the set 6—7.

But another tale of a man losing his temper did not end so well for him. Johan Kriek, South Africa's leading player, who has made a deep mark in world tennis in the past two years, and was number 15 seed in this tournament, lost to Peter Rennert from California, 6—7, 6—3, 0—6 on an outside court.

For Latin America it was a good day on the courts because spart from Pecci's survival in the second zound, Andres Gomez, from Equador: put out Tim Gulilisson seeded twelfth. Italy rely on experience Turin, June 12.—Italy's aging but durable Davis Cup party take on the unfancied Switzerland in a European zone section "A" semi-final round match here tomorrow. Italy, beaten 5—0 in last year's Davis Cup final by the United States, rely on the vast international experience of Adrianno Panetta, Corrado Barazzutti and Paolo Bertolucci.

After a disappointing season these three are anxious to prove they are still a force to be reckoned with, at least on the Davis Cup circuit. The young Swiss party's hopes of reaching the finals rest largely with Heinz Gunthardt, aged 21 and the best player Switzerland has produced in decades, After recent tournsment victories in Belginm and South Africa Gunthardt jumped from fifty-second to thirty-second place in the world rankings, an achievement accomplished in less than a year.

Gunthardt will be at Roland Stadler; his brother Martus and Ivan Dupasquier. Two years ago Guntharôt defeated both Barazzutti and Panetta in the only encounters the Italians bave had with the young Swiss star.

Among Guntherdr's victims at the recent French Open champion-ships was Victor Amaya of the United States. But if history is anything to go by the Italians should not have too much trouble reaching the finals.

They comformably defeated Switzerland in their only other Davis Cup matches in 1932 and 1934.

Barazzutti will meet Heinz Gunz-hardt in the opening march, according to the draw which was according to the graw which was later announced by tournament organizers. Panaria will play Stadler in the second singles. On Saturday Panaria and Berrolucci face the Cumhardt brothers in the doubles whereas on Sunday Barazzutti first meets Stadler before Panatta plays Heinz Gunt-hardt in the final singles.

France, without their top player France, without their top player Yannick Noah, are underdogs for their European zone sertion "B" Davis Cup semi-final against Czechoslovakia in Prague beginning tomorrow. Noah, is still suffering from the thigh muscle injury he ustained in a match against Jimmy Connors during the recent French championships.

By Sydney Friskin The whole of the machinery in The whole of the machinery in the women's tennis tournament at Chichester sponsored by Crossley Carpets was geared yesterday to the meeting between Chris Lloyd and the 15-year-old schoolgirt Andrea Jaeger. Mrs Lloyd won a match of superb rallies by 6—3, 6—2 in 93 minutes to reach the semi-final round.

Mrs Lloyd admitted that she was a little apprehensive at meetwas a little apprehensive at meeting a player ten years younger who had in a short time built such a wonderful reputation. Her nervousness showed at the start of the march with Miss Jaegos leading 2—i after an early break of service. But once Mrs Lloyd broke back to two-all she recovered her composure and went on to win comfortably.

Describing Miss Jaeger as the player of the future, Mrs Lloyd said that she is more flexible than she was at her age and that her game has more variety. Mrs Lloyd added that she was happy to have got this match out of the way. It was one in which she had to draw heavily on her experience to overcome a spirited challenge.

Both struck the doublehanded backband with telling force, both played some lovely dropshots, both served well; but though Miss Jaeger retrieved magnificently she could not in the end stop the onslaught. She gave the ball a little more air and showed more emotion on court.

It seems that the army of talented young players who recently invaded the world of women's tennis is not yet ready for the takeover. Three matches in yesterday's quarterfinal round fell to the more mature player and of the four in today's semifinal round, Pam Shriver, aged 17, is the odd one out. The semi-final linenp is: Mrs Lloyd v Miss Shriver; Betty Stove v Evonne Cawley.

Pat Eddery was at his strongest when he just managed to keep Prince of Padua's head in front of Champagne Charlie as the Fox hill Stakes ebbed away. The stewards hel dan inquiry into the running and riding of Crispia who finished fifth. They interviewed Willie Carson and John Dunlop, the jockey and trainer in question, and recorded their explanation that Crispin had had a virus and Carson had been instructed not to give him a hard race, Prince of Padua was Eddery's to give him a hard race.

Prince of Padua was Eddery's Sth winner of the season and the 190th that his lad, Allan Welbourne, has looked after. Eddery took his score so Si when he won the next race, the Childrey Maiden Stakes. Champion Stakes winner, Northern Baby, in the Prix La Force. However, the colt had a pretty hard time of it, and after finishing second to Gregorian at Sandown in the spring, Prince Rheingold then disappointed when last behind More Light at Newmarket. So Dunlop decided on a series of confidence-boosting races. An easy victory over some moderate opponents at Poutefract was the first step, but the useful Golden River was a far tougher rival yesterday.

However, Hide made it look so easy. Approaching the straight, Joe Mercer drove Golden River into a clear lead. But once in line for home they were joined by Prince Rheingold and it was immediately clear that the favourite was only cantering. But Hide sat as still as a mouse and it was only a hundred yards from home that the jockey allowed Prince

There is no pleasure in sport comparable to that of warting a was only half a length but the master of his craft in action. Whether it be Viv Richards in full flight at Trent Bridge, Bjorn Borg's Hashing passing shots at Wimbledou or Trevor Francis turning on the spot and stroking the ball past a defender, the exittement is the same. You know you are watching the best in the world. And yesterday, at Beverley, Edward Hide gave a large crowd the same kind of thrill when landing his third treble of the season on Cherry Corner, Cannon King, and Prince Rheingold.

Hide had a simple task when winning the Brantingham Selling Stakes on Cherry Corner for Herbert Jones. But on Prince Rheingold and Cannon King, the leading Northern jockey showed all the artistry and tactical flair that have carried him to victory in six classic races. John Dunlop has done a first rate job with Prince Rheingold, a your-year-old who was a high class animal when trained in France last season. At Longchamp he finished only one-and-a-half lengths behind the Champion Stakes winner, Northern Baby, in the Prix La Force. However, the colt had a preity hard time of it, and after finishing trainer for Experience at Strikers and the Cannon Singapore, and his record to finish the colt and the care was one to the distance Cannon King was delighted. Sunny Smile will now go for the Chester Stakes at Newcastle; his Lingfield winner, Mustika, is bound for the Norfolk Stakes at Ascot; and Intercontinental, who won the last race at Newbury yesterday, will now take his chance in the Coventry Stakes, the leading race for two-year-old colts at the Royal meeting.

And so to York where there is a fairly quiet afternoon in store before the excitement of comprow's Timeform charity meeting. Henry Candy, who is deligated with the way in which Master Willie has taken his hard race in the Derby, can take the Dick Turpin Stakes.

Watson draws no inspiration from his early hole-in-one

Springfield, New Jersey, June 12 The highlight of the first morning's play in the United States Open golf championship at Baltusrol—and it could well turn out to be the highlight of the whole competition—was achieved by one of the favourites, Tom Watson. He took an eight-iron off the forward fourth tee (162 yards) and played a shot with the faintest parabola of draw. The ball pitched rection of the control of the parabola perhaps 13 inches to the right, pin high, skipped forward behind the hole and rolled gently back before disappearing.

The roar it evoked split the The roar it evoken spir me heavens and carried Watson, the most successful player in the United States this season, from one over par to one under. It might have been expected to inspire him to greater things, but it seemed to have the reverse effect, for come time at least. He could for some time at least. He could make little impression on the hole that followed and the second short hole, the 205 yards ninth, retrieved Baltusrol's reputation by extracting the four fro him. A five followed at the next (454 yards) and Christine Langford, a 23-yearold from Kent, showed glimpses of the form which gained her three tournament successes last year in returning a five-under-par 59 to lead the field at the halfway stage of the WPGA Carslerg tournament at Knowle, Bristol, yesterday.

Miss Langford survives a seven at the last

Even though she finished with a seven at the last hole, Miss Langford held on to her lead by one stroke from Catherin Panton, whose round of 70 also broke the 25-year-old ourse record by one stroke. Lee Trevino was among the early leaders with a 63. Whatever others may have thought Trevino, sixth here on his first appearance in the championship 13: years ago, had discounted his chances last night. He claimed that he had lost all confidence in his putter and could not see how he could come out on the top of the pile on Sunday night. But Trevino, though one of the most gennine and human of sporting superstars, is by no means beyond some hustling gamesmanship when dealing with his equals and there remained the thought that he was talking with torgue in cheek. cougue in cheek.

Today, he said, he putted well and explained that he had taken advantage of a new device on the market for discovering whether or not one is litting the ball with the meat of the club. It takes the form of a strip of paper which is stick to the club face and registers a mark on impact to show precisely where the ball has left the club.

Reading of it in a magazine recently, I had formed the opinion that it was yet another of a million or more sales pitches that have milked golfers of their money in their vain hope of adding yards to their drive, reliability to their sand shots and accuracy to their putts. That may still be the case, but on Trevino's evidence this latest device may have some merit. but on Trevino's evidence this latest device may have some merit. Hull promise to spend still more

Hull, beaten finalists in the Rugby League Cup final, at Wembley last month, has paid a world record £40,000 transfer fee for Wakefield Trinity's Great Britain prop forward Trevor Skerrett.
Hull have now spent more than £160,000 on new players in the last three seasons and their club chairman, Charles Watson, said today that the spending would continue.

"Our priority has been a first-class stand-off half and the signing of Skerrett will in no way jeopard-

The Hull team manager, Arthur Bunting, said he was sure Skerrett would become a big favourite at Hull.

By John Watson The first round of the high-goal five-chukka championship for the Warwickshire Cup was completed at Smith's Lawn, Windsor, yesterday when Guy Wildenstein's 22-goal team, Les Diables Bleues, defeated Christian Heppe BBs by 10—44.

The BEs, aggregating 20 goals on handicap, started the match 13 up but the Devils' Julian Hipwood, riding Wildenstein's brilliant former champon, Sofia, found the mer champon, Sofia, toung the flags twice to overtake them before the end of the first chukka. By the finish of the game Hipwood had scored seven times.

His effectiveness as a pivot man, and in particular his close teamwork with Alphonso Pieres, his number two, was one telling factor in this courset. The defensive work of Prince Charles, who has added considerable length to his backhanders in the past couple of seasons, was another.

An international regatta starting on the Rotsee lake, Lucerne, today, has attracted a record number of 180 crews from 31 countries and could overshadow the rowing programme at the Moscow Olympics, the organizers said. Oarsmen and women from strong rowing countries such as the United States, Canada, New Zealand, West Germany, Norway and Argentina are taking part, although their national Olympic committees are boycotting the committees are boycotting the Moscow Games.

The three-day regatta should be the biggest event in the rowing world this year as East Europeau crews, who have dominated the sport in recent years, are also taking part. The only world champions missing are the double-sculling brothers Frank and Alf Hansen of Norway.

The rivals Pertti Karppinen of Finland and Peter-Michael Kolbe of West Germany, are tipped to reach the single scull finals for a duel which will not be repeated during the Olympics as West Germany have joined the boycott of the Games.

Silke was reported by coast-guards to be two miles south of Fowey and apparently returning to Plymouth. Her forestay appeared to be broken and she was taking on fuel from a passing cruiser. By means of the Argos satellite tracking system it is known that Loizeau has turned back, although at this stage it is not known why. At one time it was thought that John Charnley in Atlantic Harp might also be forced to retire, but he has now confirmed that his injured hand is improving and he intends to carry on. Hurricane is the sort of film— an old-fashioned, 22 million dollar remake—which it is not considered very chic to like; but its total, all-out commitdrama seems to me quite admir-able. Apart from this it makes an interesting, and not at all discreditable, comparison with John Ford's original verson of the novel by Charles Nordhoff and James Norman Hall, who were also the authors of Mating on Reports. Mutiny on Bounty,

Both versions mark the tailboth versions mark the tail-ends of cycles of disaster movies. Before creating the grand finale of Hurricane the great special effects man James Basevi had burned down the city in In Old Chicago and created an earthquake in San Francisco, a typhoon in Suez and a locust swarm in The Good Earth. Both films, equally, seem to respond to a current rearning for escapism, whether the escape be to different worlds or periods or climes. The South Seas in the 1920s serve this purpose admi-others are unmistakably senti-mentalized. Many of his animals too are sentimentalized; his does should be on the cover of the best-selling paperback edition of some affecting tale of animal saga-city and heroism, his wolves in a Disney storyboard. It is good to have such an extensive showing of the artist over here, so that we can judge his un-changing art (worryingly unchanged over nearly 40 years of the same). But I suspect he will be recognized as an artist who, whatever his reputation in his

Milton Avery is a very dif-ferent matter. His painting is as easy to take as Wyeth's but, where with Wyeth one is confashionable, surviving only in the pages of glossy American magazines, it was easy enough to speer at Christina's World (1948) and suggest that with its elaborate "programme" — Christina is not a teenager with scious primarily of all the effort which has gone into it, with Avery one is captivated by the sheer joyous ease of it all. No doubt Avery, like a painter with whom he has many temperamental and stylistic affinities, should have been all the necessary. Henri Hayden, did all the neces-sary brainwork first, but his brilliantly coloured landscapes managed to feel like instan-taneous sketches dashed on to canvas for the sheer delight of it. So much of art divides into 1066 and All That's Cavalier/Roundbead dichotomy (wrong-but-romantic and right but repulsive); Avery and Wyeth, so near and yet so far, do not make the choice any

I pity anyone who had to watch it on a black and white ser, for it was beautifully photographed by Maurice Fisher and Jim Saunders. There was nothing pretty about it; the film was breathtaking. This came as a bit of a surprise because it was all shot in Britain and one tends to think of British scenery as calm and rather get sentimental about? Do scenery as calm and rather they sit in at nights and watch understated, except for Northumberland, say, or the wilds of Scotland. But Rites of Spring was shot in the normally not very dramatic southern English countryside, with one side trip to Wales, and it, quite simply, told the story of a British spring, starting with the first stirrings of the first buds of at the countryside, not when they had adders, copulating. Hugh David, the narrator, told us the male was the one with the signag lines down his back. David's narration was very straight serious stuff with a few schoolmasterly attempts at humour. He certainly gave us a lot of information in 50 minutes. But who could take it all in? And if you sat carefully taking notes, well you risked losing sight of all those beauti-

Mr Harty, of course, is the masochist's masochist. Unease is his element, and, when it comes to blowing up the ground from under his own feet, nobody does it better. Not content with pronouncing Bae-deker "Bye-decker" (which does not much matter since. though incorrect, it is standard English usage), he then had to ask Miss Keith "Or is it Bay-decker?"—whereat she quietly assured him it was, with only the timest hint in her tone of Russell, you know perfectly well that it is. Miss Keith was at her best with Stephen Spender's account of Ethel Smyth pulling on a birdcage before going in to dine with Leonard and Virginia Woolf, Bennett with an inventory of items of a mantlepiece which approached the memorably bitter pathos of his recent plays for LWT, and Stritch finally hit her stride which is pretty stridey-with the classic "Useful Phrases" from Sail Away. The musical score for the film was one of the last the actors will have knocked off another 15 to 25 minutes. I can tell you that The Temptation of Christ, which I saw, will be gone from the events. The split-second changes of colour and texture were unusually dramatic, as was the costuming of the encores: for the deeply tronic "Freedom of Choice", Devo emerged in Bitler masks and roller-disco outlies, see the forestend of the cost of tabards for the fractured 7/4 of "Jocko Homo", their signs-

It is not surprising that a man who baffled his contemporaries as much as Arthur James Balfour did should have caused such problems to his biographers. Each has been an able partisan, and yet the results have been oddly unsatisfying. As Mary Gladstone wrote of him as a young man,

"In him culminated the in-terest, the charm, the mys-tery". All remain, and although Lord Egremont's characteristically sensitive and

At a time when the world is poised in a state of great anxiety and there are douots about the authority of the American leadership, this exercise could carry great risks for us all. Mr Pym—It is extremely important that the forces of all members of the alliance are involved in exercises. This is a routine exercise. There have been many like it before. It involved United States-based strategic forces. That is the position. It is entirely right that they should do that.

It is necessary, in the present state of the world, that all forces should be at full extent of unlaing. Mr Anthony Kershaw (Stroud, C)—He should have expressed, sympaths to Mr Rodgers who did not even know that the left wing was going to have a political broadcast advocating betraval of our responsibilities to our silies. The Opposition in no way justified everything that happened on picket Aues. They were not justifying violence, intimidation, "watching and besetting," and many activities which had occurred in the famous winter of discontent in a minority of instances under the umbrella of mass picketing.

The Opposition's postion was that these were all against the law that these were all against the law already. They were best left to the ordinary operations of the police. What the Opposition amend-ments were trying to do was to Mr Pym-This is not a Nato exercise. That does not arise. It refers to United States forces.

Mr Raymond Whitney (Wycombe, C)—This exercise will need all the determination of the United States to maintain its defensive capability in a high state of alert and that capability is important to the whole western alliance, contrary to last night's broadcast tending towards undiateral disarmament. Mr Pym—I agree about the importance of te exercise, but I say again that there is nothing special about it. It is routine and one of an

It should be looked at in that light and it is important to under-stand, and that it be understood by all potential adversaries, that they are in a state of great readiness and preparedness.

Mr Robert Cryed (Keighley, Lab)—It is inappropriate after seven months in which there have been three computer errors leading to some stage towards nuclear con-frontation, that America should embark yet again on a nuclear tactical exercise. Would be tell the Americans that the world's people are not looking for more nuclear deployment but for less and for genuine negotiations for multilateral disarmament with Russia to give us a secure, nuclear-free future?

Mr Pym-Nobody likes a mistake such as occurred last week. But he knows that an unremitting effort towards arms control is a major pillar of our defence policy. At least we share that with the Oppo-sition Front Bench. Trying to pre-tend otherwise is misleading. Employment Bill clause adds protection

Two Conservative MPs urged the Government to reexamine the Employment Bill when Mr William Whitelaw, Home Secretary and Deputy Leader of the Conservative Party, answered Commons question in the absence of the Prime Missiers.

Mr lyor Stanbrook (Bromley, Orpington, C) asked—Is he able to confirm that Clause 16 of the Employment Bill, as drafted, meets to the full the Government's meas to the fill the Government's commitment on secondary action, expressed in page 10 of the Government's election manifesto? and, as has been pointed out by many people, as it does not, will the Government look at the wording of the clause again?

Bipartisan approach to disabled at an end

Being mean to disabled people was self-defeating as well as inhumane. Mr Alfred Morris, Opposition spokesman for the disabled, said when opening a debate on the disabled.

The Opposition, he said, wanted to show its contempt for a Government which was giving higher priority to tax cuts for the strong and fortunate, people at the top of the income scales, than to protecting even the invalidity benefits of people below the tax threshold whose working lives had been cur short by long-term sickness and disability. Mr Morris (Manchester, Wythen-shawe, Lab) moved: "That this

House, aware of the desire of disabled people to live independent lives in their own homes and of the economic advantages for the nation of allowing them to do so, deplores the Government's planned vices: rejects the Government's dards of large numbers of the poorest disabled people by cutting the value of invalidity benefit by at least 5 per cent from November; and calls upon the Government to reverse policies that con-flict with their manifesto commit-ments to the disabled and which are both self-defeating and in

It was wrong, he said, that spending on some of the most essential services for disabled people should have been cut by proportionately more than that of other services. The findings of recent disturbing surveys formed a devastating analysis of the curs on chronically sick and disabled

In Essex, although its rates were 5 per cent below the national average and spending was 12 per cent less on social services than in the average shire county, dis-abled people were faced with the payment of 25p per day for attendance at day centres. Was that acceptable ?

Every study of the cuts in personal social services showed that many local councils looked for quick savings. In the words of the Personal Social Services Council, there was little evidence of any attempt to protect vulnerable groups including the seriously dis-abled.

How could Mr Reginald Prentice, Minister for Social Security and the Disabled, expect anyone and the Distolect, expect anyone to take him seriously. Speaking as Labour minister a few short years ago he said: "If sacrifices are to be borne the broadest backs must bear the heaviest sacrifice". Now he said: 'The disabled caunor expect to be exempted from the sacrifices necessary". Either be was wrong before or he was wrong now. It was bare-faced bias in favour of the strong and fortun-ate at the expense of many of the unfortunate people in

This was a Government that kicked people when they were kicked people when they were down. What made this even harder for the victims to take was that the Government spokesman in this debate (Mr Prentice) was a man debate (Mr Prenice) was a man who for more than a generation argued the socialist case that especially in times of economic dif-ficulty the broadest backs must bear the extra burden.

It was a myth to say the Government inherited an economic mess from the Labour Government. The mess was very much of their own making. This Government inherited from Labour an economy which even by their own criteria was in much better shape than any Labour administration had ever taken over from the Conservatives.

It was a myth that the Government's purpose in trying to tackle inflation was to protect the old, the sick and the disabled. If the Government's main concern had and the disabled they would cer-tainly not have smashed the link forged by Labour's Social Security Act 1975 between social benefits and earnings.

You do not (be said) prove your concern for people by putting them at the top of your hit list. Under this Government, the claims of the old, sick and the disabled come well below those of the top tax payers. Mr Reginald Prentice, Minister of Mr Regulate Frence, Minister of State for Social Security and Disabled (Daventry, C) moved an amendment, that the House "recognizes that, as two of the largest spending programmes, social security and health and personal security and health and personal security. sonal social services, must make some contribution to the inescap-able reduction in public spending required by the economic situation inherited by the Government last year, welcomes the valuable and

The 5 per cent reduction in what would otherwise have been an uprating of the invalidity benefits in November was unpalarable to But that proposal, together with others, was a necessary part of the reduction in social security expenditure, which was part of the economic strategy of the Govern-

It was not true, as the Opposi-tion made out in the motion, that the living standards of the poorest were eligible for supplementary benefits. They would be protected against rises in prices. Many dis-abled people in the country would be benefiting by up to £78 a pear. If we take the position of the poorest diabled people (he said) they are better off as a result of the measures taken by the Government than they would have been under the arrangements we in-

There would be some modest increases in 1980-81 in local auth-ority provision for the disabled, although not as much as most people would want to see in an ideal world. The facts contradicted the wording of the Opposition motion. The Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act had been a success story.

The fastest increase in provision was during the Conservative Government in the early 1970s. In the three years following 1971 there were increases of 11 per cent, 17 per cent and 15 per cent, In five years of Labour Government the increase was 10.7 per cent. Labour were not in a position to come to the Commons and pretend to have a monopoly on compassion.

Much more was receded. The Much more was needed. The Chronically Sick and Disabled Per-

The component 5-MOP stimulates the skin cells to produce the pigment melanin more rapidly than usual when illuminated by long-wavelength ultraviolet light. It is that property that has made lottons based on bergamot oil so popular on Mediterranean beaches.

That damage results in the death of cells when they divide into two. Because psoriests is caused when patches of skin cells grow too rapidly, combined therapy with 8-MOP and ultraviolet light has

Decreasing chance of escaping justice

House of Commons
Those who contemplated committing murder in Northern Ireland should realize there was a decreasing chance of escaping justice, Mr Humphrey Atkins, Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, said during questions on the security

stuation.

He said that during the last four weeks 43 people had been charged with terrorist crimes including seven of them with murder. It does not matter (he said) how long ago the murders were committed, the police will continue to seek out the murderers and bring them to justice. They are having an increasing success.

The Rev Ian Paisicy (Antrim, North, Dem U) had said:—There is deep reviusion and concern in Northern Ireland about the callons and cold-blooded shooting and killing last weekend of Councillor John Turnly, a Larne district councillor, and also at the other end of the Province, at the killing of Mr Richard Latimer, a member of the Ulster Defence Regiment.

including mme, has been distinctly acceptated of its chances. I see no reason on present evidence to change this judgment. But it is worth considering what the impact on British politics would be if Mr Roy Jenkins did manage to confound the sceptics.

I had always assumed until this past week that if he was ssimi a substantial centre party would be created by stages. The first stage would be a split in the Labour Party with a mamber of right-wingers breaking away to fight the next election with Mr Jenkins as social democrats. They would have an electoral pact with the Liberals, whereby both sides sould agree not to contest conwould agree not to contest con-stituencies in which, say, the top 80 candidates of the other party were standing.

After the election the social democrates and the Liberals would consult closely on parliamentary tactics. In due course this habit of working together would probably head to an outright merger. This new enlarged party would then either almost account of the course of the c perpetually hold the balance of power—in which case it would usually be in oice, whether with Labour or the Conservatives or it would replace one of the existing major parties,

For this process to be begun would be necesary for Mr lenkins to attract dissidents from the Parliamentary Labour Party: otherwise his social democratic splinter group would not look credible, even for the limited initial purpose of winning a respectable number of seats with the help of an electoral pact with the

But potential Labour dissidents would be more likely to break away if they felt that they were not rushing immedistely into the arms of the Liberals. That is why it is good tactics for Mr Jenkins to keep a certain distance from the Liberals for the moment if he really thinks he has a reasonable chance of attracting a significant Labour breekaway throw in his lot directly with the Liberals than make the for orn attempt to go it alone without sufficient dissidents in his ranks to make the operation credible. If a substantial new centre party was to come about, nowever, it seemed natural to expect this to be achieved by

A significant breakaway

The odds egainst such a tial, Nor would it be necessary venture succeeding were always to, belong to a large party, in bound to be high. But over the past week I have been forced Mr Jenkins were to get his first-stage rocket off the groundand even if there were a signeficant breaksway from the Labour Perty, a broad new centre party would then

First, if the centre forces in British politics were to hold the balance of power—as they would be very likely to do it they increased their strength appreciably—they would insist on electoral reform as the first condition for giving their support to either major party. It is true that Mr Jenkins made it clear on Monday that he did not regard electoral reform as a precondition for the rise of a centre party. But once it had emerged under the present system such a party, and any other small party in the centre, would naturally try securing proportional represen-

Much of the comment on the sure on smaller parties to idea of a new centre party, amalgamate, though to what extent proportional representation would offer a fruitful life on their own to such parties would depend on which system was adopted. But proportional representation would not by itself remove that pressure. A larger grouping would always look more impressive to an electorate accustomed to associate the size of an individual party with its capacity to exercise power. A new factor, however, has become apparent over the past week: the distaste that each of the actual or potential forces in the centre have for pooling their resources with each other. Influential Liberal voices have been raised against any electoral pact with a Jenkins party that insists on keeping its own identity. That is precisely what Mr Jenkins evidently wishes to do. The trio of Mrs Shirley Williams, Dr David Owen and Mr William Rodgers. who last Saturday threatened to leave the Labour Party if a future Labour government was committed to take Britain out of the EEC, are decidely cool about joining Mr Jenkins, never mind the Liberals, if they were forced to make a move. And a number of right-wing Labour MPs, the kind of people who might possibly follow a might possibly follow williams Owen-Rodgers break away if it ever came about, have also become distinctly wary of Mr Jenkins.

A certain fastidiousness

Some of these positions have no doubt been taken for tactical purposes. But there is more to than that : there is a vertain fastidiousness in the centre, however, that loose concept may he defined. This would not be enough to prevent their get-ting together in the and if long-term political survival re-quired it. Nor would proportional representation be enough to persuade them to keep their separate identities. But the two together might well have that

This reluctance to cooperate makes it all the less likely that attempts to break the present mould of British party politics will succeed. But it means that if they are successful there will more probably be not one substantial party of the centre, but sersral groupings.

The major parties would as a general rule be forced to compete for the support of one or more of them in order to hold office. But parties in the centre

This would inevitably have its effect on those now on what might be termed the centrist might be tarmed the central fringes of the major parties left-wing Tories and right-wing Labour members. This would reduce the presentation of a multi-party system. Which means that the question which has been raised this week goes much deeper than whether Mr Jenkins will make it. Mr Abba Eban, the former Israeli Foreign Minister, gives his forthright views on the present deadlock in the Middle East

The West Bank: why have Europe's diplomats played such an unimpressive role?

The answer lies, first of ail, in West Europe's failure of selfcriticism. In a region where we have learned to be grateful for small mercies, the past seven years have seen large results

The story begins with the case-fire of October 1973, which came just in time to prevent the Kippur war from becoming global confrontation. The Geneva peace conference of De-cember 1973, set a precedent for bringing Israel and some Areb states around a single table. Then came the Egyptian Israeli disengagement agree-ment (January 1974), the Syrian-Israeli disengagement agreement (May 1974) and the Sinia interim agreement (September 1975).

These accords stabilized areas from which all the Arab-Israeli

It is hard to think of any other major dispute in which Europe, the home of classical diplomacy, has played a less impressive role. And the impressive role. And the reasons for this detachment are even more disquieting than the fact itself. There would have been no negotiating sequence without the cease-fire of 1973 and no cease-fire without the American air-lift which cor-rected the military balance in the field as an incentive to the cessation of armed action. But the effort to produce this onating balance was actively hindered by some European countries which denied their air-space to American supply planes and in one celebrated case withheld spare parts from Israel's British manufactured tanks. I shall not soon forget my own talks in Washington in November, 1973, when the United States and Israel joined in common anger to exclude sterи Еиторе from the Geneva peace conference and, thereafter, by mertia and continuity, from the disengagement talks and the peace negotia

Europe, of course, had a sovereign right to fix its own priorities and to put its oil supplies at the head of the list. But having placed a parochial and mercantile approach above Israel's survival and western solidarity, Europe could not expect to be taken seriously as disinterested conciliator in later months.

The shower of European statements in favour of Pales-tinian "self-determination" was recently inaugurated by Presi-Giscard d'Estaing Kulwelt. Now Kuwait is not the natural arena for proclaiming the rights of man. Nobody in Kuwait, except the monarch, determines himself or anything else. Since the production o oil is more abundant in Kuwait than the output of human rights, the natural Israeli assumption was that European leaders were moved less by universal principles than by an Israelis would be wrong to believe that this is the whole story. There are many objective grounds for criticizing some of Israel's current policies. But a European pretence of total altruism is sanc imonious and unconvincing.

Western Europe will have a better chance to establish itself as a viable partner in Middle Eastern diplomacy if it acknowledges some of the errors that have contributed to its exclusion hitherto. Its primary fallacy has been to underestimate the importance of the Egyptian-Israeli meaty. I doubt ther Kafka or George Orwell in their moments of darkest fantasy would have dared to ctray an international peace organization condemning a peace treaty that put an end to three decades of war beout some international organization committing themselves to this absurdity, while European militates against a solution of the Palestine problem. Nothing could be farther from the truth. If anything the exemplary effects of the Egyptian-Israeli settlement offer a clear guide interests at beart.

Ir has been empirically proved that once Israells see a credible prospect of peace with an Areb nation, their previous ideas on the relation between territory and security are sharply transformed. If Europe grants recogni-tion to the PLO before any Palestinian organization has accepted the axiom of Israel's starchood, it squanders one of the incentives which, if rigorously used, might have induced moderate impulses in the Palestinian community. Why should the Palestinians pay a price that is not even asked? Another European fallacy consists of a strange disregard for Western solidarity. The United States is so crucial to the strategic and diplomatic prospect in the Middle East that Europe can play a role only in a context of Western harmony, not of Western

There is a supercilious tendency in Europe to deride America's electoral concerns. But American policy is thrown off balance by voting considera-tions for less than is Europe by its obsession with Arab money and oil Israelis field it hard to understand why regard for sentiment and opinion should be regarded as less legitimate than concern for economic gain.

These conceptual defects are compounded by a European tendency to isolate the Palestine issue from its Jordanian con-text. The Jordanian and Palestinian problems are not identical, but nor are they hermetically distinct. No important segment of Israeli opinion would renounce territory close to our lives and homes in favour of a virulent, hostile PLO state. But many Israelis would make substantial territorial conces-sions in favour of a Jordanian-

I personally have suggested variant under which Israel, orden and those parts of the West Bank and Gaze that Israel would relinquish in a peace settlement might form a community" on the EEC model, combining political separation with economic integration and mutual accessibility.

If Jordso remains primly detached from all these options is will virtually be re-sponsible for prolonging Israeli military administration in the West Bank and Gaza. The irony is that but for King Husain's tragic decision to make war against Israel in June 1967. there would not be an Israeli administration in the West Bank today.

It seems eccentric for a statesman to have kindled a fire 13 years ago and to refuse cooperation in putting it out today. Yet no European influence whatever is being applied in an effort to associate Jordan. with the peace process.

Today the economy is in dis-array after the riots in Seoul and the southern city of Kwangju last month by rhou-sands of militant students. In Kwangju she use of the army to put down the trouble—leaving hundreds dead or injured— gave the impression of a near civil war.

In essence the students took to the streets to call for the end of martial law and the resignation of General Chun Doo-Hwan, the country's unpopular military security chief, who has emerged as the power behind President Choi Kyu Hah's throne. It is also self evident why

But more important, the political upheaval has under-lined one stark fact for 37 million South Koreans. South Korea certainly built

June 18 is looming up fast. It is a date of deep monumental and historical significance to and historical significance to both Britain and France, but, as befits their traditional rela-tionship, for very different rea-

As far as monuments are concerned the date in France is best commemorated by a grave and in Britain by a railway station. As far as history is concerned, the French see it as the start of an era of defiant French glory, while the British regard it as the end of an era of overweening French gloxy. The essential difference is that the June 18 fondly and often passionately remembered in France occurred 125 years after the June 18 proudly bur dinly remembered in Britain. In France it is the June 18 of 1940, when a little known junior general called de Gaulle made a little heard broadcast from London to rally his recently routed country.
To the modern Frenchmen this thin small broadcast voice crying from the British wilderness led to the ultimate conversion

In Britain it is the June 18 of 1815 when Wellington and all his classmates from the playing fields of Exon finally taught that little Corsican upstart Napoleon the lesson of fitting humility and allowed the British to get on with the task of civilizing the Empire. But, whereas June 18 in France is to be marked by,

among other things, a Presidential speech, a huge rally at the late General's grave at Colombey-les-deux-Eglises and a son et lumière spectacular in front of the Eiffel Tower, it is highly unlikely that more than about one southern region commuter in a thousand could name the date which caused his main line terminal to be called after the small Belgian town of

The British urge the French "remember Waterloo" by brandishing banners with that message at important inter-national meeting places like Twickenham, but the intended insult is lost on a nation which still reveres the memory of the men who came nearest to giv-ing France world supremacy. ere is the apocryphal story of the bemused Frenchman on the South Bank wondering what on earth had prompted the amazing English to name a railway station after a calami-

In the past few weeks there have been two other French defears commanding attention which intimately involve the British. Old wounds dating back to Joan of Arc and before have been reopened to allow a vigorous rubbing of salt to take place. The defeats are those of France itself in 1940 and of the French goveru-The events leading up to the evacuation from Dunkirk have been closely documented by the French media as the fortieth anniversary of that British victory snatched from defeat has been grimly cele-brated. The "necessary myth" of Dunkirk in France is that the British army cut and ran leaving an unsupported French army to fend for itself. The following extract from Le Figaro of June 3 is no more than typical. "Dunkirk would never have held out if a defensive front had not been put up under the command of Admiral Abrial—a front established in unimagin able conditions of improviration. The English, to whom the defence of the eastern sector of Dunkirk had been entrusted, pulled back—some-times shortly after they were established—to ohey orders coming from London and the French arrived without wea-pons, having been forced to give them up at road blocks set up by the Engish who did not want to see the ways leading to the port cluttered up."

But the perfidy of Albion in June, 1940, on the beaches of Dunkirk was in French eyes atoned for by the British courage on the beaches of Normandy in 1944. The debt baving been cancelled it was time to reform the entente cordiale all, Britain might be saved. On May 30, however, the very anniversary of the martyrthroats is not the fact that the Brussels settlement will cost Frenchmen money. What sticks in French throats is that Britain had the gall-faced cheek to go before its eight partners and plead poverty as the reason for not being able to meet its European financial obligations.

As the French see, it, with North Sea oil and coal, Britain has no real energy worry. It is just that the British are too lazy to use all that energy. The current story in France concerns the British husinessman who was sent to discover the possibilities for development in Corsica—the one area which, despite Napoleon, every conscientious mainland Frenchman will agree is slow-moving and bebind the rimes.

According to the story the businessman cabled back after a couple of days to report that it was pointless for any British firm to try to open up on the island "because we just coulco't stand the pace ".

This is the policy allies and will carry with him with which the party now enters the election campaign, and it puts Herr Schmidt in a strong position.

This does not dispose of the problem that Herr Schmidt is under public pressure to keep alive his eastern policy and to protect the German interest in European détente. For many Germans, fear of the Russians now mingles with fear that the United States cannot be relied upon to defend Europe or is liable to blunder into an avoidable war.

This does not blind most of them to the fact their security depends wholly on the United States. What they appear to want is not a weakening of ties with the alliance but more active West. German and European diplomacy both within the alliance and on behalf of the alliance in relations with Moscow. They want Europe to reassert itself as a diplomatic power to fill the gap left by faltering America. This, at any rate, is the more responsible version. Unfortunately there is a less responsible tendency to hope that Europe can be preserved as an island détente while America alone carries the burden of patrolling its borders and protecting its vital lines to markets and raw materials.

It is against this background that Herr Schmidt will be going to Moscow at the end of this month as the first western leader to do so since the invasion of Afghanistan. His with Mr Brezhney meeting will be very different from Giscard's furtive President and irresponsible meeting with the Soviet leader in Warsaw. That was undertaken without serious preparation, without consultation with France's allies, and without any prospect of results. The President has been deservedly criticized at home. Herr Schmidt in contrast, is seeking the full backing of his their agreed position and their mandate. He will also have the advantage that the Soviet Union takes West Germany extremely seriously as the major power in Europe, whereas on the whole it regards France as useful only for its nuisance value in the western

Even so, Herr Schmidt's critics are legitimately asking what the trip can achieve. There is no sign of any Soviet give on arms control or on Afghanistan. There is no lack of secret com-munication between Washington and Moscow. Yet the trip does have serious value. First, if Herr Schmidt takes with him a united western position it will show the Russians that the crisis provoked by their invasion of Afghanistan has not just been stirred up by the American Administration in order to get President Carter re-elected but represents deep and real concerns of the western alliance. Secondly it can usefully reassure a worried West German public that East-West dinlomacy is conrinuing. Secret talks herween the super powers are not enough when the public has lost faith in the capacity of the super powers to negotiate intelligently. There must be some theatre as well. Thirdly, it is just possible that he can find a formula for gerting talks going on nuclear weapons in Europe. Finally, it is entirely legiti-mate for a West German leader in a time of tension to save what he can of his nation's interests. provided he does so in collaboration with his allies. This is what Herr Schmidt is doing. He is no fool. His party has a long history of dealing with communists, and it was he himself, after all, who pressed hardest for the modernization of Nato's nuclear weapons in Europe. He is one of the strongest and most reliable political leaders in Europe, and the best thing his allies can do is to trust him.

The government would reply that there was due process of law, and would adduce precedeuts to show that the freedom of speech and of assembly cannot be taken as giving one the right to speak or assemble in a place where one has no legal right to be at all. For instance freedom of assembly does not confer a right to hold an assembly in the White House grounds, so, arguably, it does not confer a right to free speech or assembly in a banned country. Only the Supreme Court, after a long string of hearings in lower courts and no doubt a final battle royal between the incumbent Attorney-General and his distinguished, if errant, predecessor, could finally decide the issue. But that thought in itself should be enough to decide another issue, which is whether the administration would be wise to go ahead with charges against Mr Clark. To do so would almost certainly be counter-productive to any purpose the administration hoped to achieve. It would make Mr Clark, in the eyes of both national and international opinion, a more sympathetic and important figure than he need a decision was reached the particular circumstances which produced the case (the crisis over the hostages in Iran) would almost certainly be long over. Another question is whether Mr Clark was right to do what he did. There can be no serious doubt about his good faith. In his judgment his action was more likely to contribute to the eventual release of the hostages, to the general improvement of relations between Iran and the United States, and so to the safeguarding of American (and indeed world) interests than was obedience to the President's orders. Given that the constitutionality of those orders is at least debatable, that the American political system is founded on freedom of speech and freedom of judgment, and that he did what he did quite openly without any attempt to escape the consequences, one must conclude that that was a judgment he was entitled to make.

Whether it was a correct one is much barder to say. Clearly there is a danger that the somewhat abject self-criticism he indulged in on behalf of his country will have encouraged the captors of the hostages to believe that American resistance is cracking and that they have only to hold on a bit longer to get, if not the actual repatriation of the Shah, at least an official mea culpa from the United States together with American support for some kind of international tribunal. On the other hand it may be that Mr Clark's disarming frankness and his patently sincere plea for the hostages' release have done something to strengthen the advocates of compromise. Certainly it was they who urged him to come, while the hardliners bitterly attacked him. It is also possible that his visit has made no difference one way or the other to a situation which internal political struggles are paramount. The hostages can only wait and hope.

It is, of course, always open to anyone who has been harmed by a criminal act to bring a civil action for damages against the offender. There may be difficulty in proving cause and effect, and, in the "Julie" case, there would be the added complication that any customer of the drug makers would have voluntary assumed at least some degree of risk by purchasing the LSD. The knowledge that the defendants have more than a half-million pounds at their disposal with which to meet any claims may, however, he a source of some incentive.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Spain. Portugal and the EEC

From Professor R. H. Graveson, QC Sir, Spain and Portugal, as your leading article on June 9 rightly tuggests, are greatly concerned over the possibility of delay in their accession to the European Com-munity. Although such delay is likely to be only tactical and temporary and not entirely to the dis-advantage of Spain and Portugal, it would be reasonable, useful and encouraging to them if the new applicants were invited to partici-pate in any discussions on a revised structure and operation of the Com munity. If a precedent were sought, one at least could be found in the representation of the United Kingdom on the EEC working party planning the European University Institute at Florence before this Considerations of convenience apart, such a course would enable the applicants to decide whether they still wished to join a reformed Community. Their views and decisions, like those of Greece at an earlier stage, are of great importance to the present members of the EEC. At no later time could those views be more influencial. From Mrs A. M. Stewart Wallace Sir, I write as a committed Con-servative to commend Mr Jenkins in his war for the pation's car. At this critical time it is vital that political thinkers should survey the wider scene which hes outside party boundaries and there must be many of us who shiver with fear at the prospect of an eventual swing to an alternative government con-trolled by Bennite philosophy and committed in advance to the strait-jacket of irreversible socialism.

We all know only top well that an electoral swing has to come as night follows day. It is my view that this Conservative Government would be doing an immeasurable service to the nation if it decided to act as a midwire at the birth of a new political alignment so that in advance of any leftward swing, a reasonable alternative can be put before the nation. Consideration of cautral funding of political parties and of the possibility of electoral reform would greatly help the pros-pects of such a new alignment.

It would be heartening if the long view could now be taken. A new party would be unlikely to win the next election but, if it could come into being and make a respectable showing, it might wall become the official Opposition ready to win an election when the appropriate time interirably came. mevirably came. Sir, Katherine Thweiter (June 9) misrepresents the Catholic position on the authority of Scrippure and tradition

The most that Catholic orthodoxy permits to be said of church tradi-tion is that it is, in certain rather carefully defined circlumstances, protected from ectual error, though even this assertion is anuch less training assertion is anuch less straightforward than she seems so think. Preservation from terror is a very different thing from being "divinely inspired". It is quite false, on any terms, to impute "divine inspiration" to church tradition

She is, again, subtly but crucially wrong in what she says almost Scripture. The Church points to Scripture, but she is not the "author" of it. Indeed, the Church is subject to Scripture in a sense in which she is not subject to even the "irreformable" elements in her tradition.

The authentic Catholic position is thus very close indeed to life Scott's (May 31) and fairly distant from Mrs Thwaites's.

Detention of immigrants From Mr Geoffrey Bindman

Sir, John Plummer (June 2) once more draws attentions to the uniquely unfettered glowers of detention conferred on immigration officers by the immigration Act, 1971. in the exercise of which many persons are ampaisoned for indefinite periods without charge or tried. When prisons are overcrowded it is extraordinary that those detained under the kozni gration Act are denied the right to apply for bail on the terms made available by the Bail Act, 1976, to those accused of criminal offences. Under the Bail Act the court must grant bail in ordinary cases before conviction unless satisfied that there are substantial grounds for believing that the defendant would sfail to surrender to custody, dr other special reasons. Moreover when bail is refused, the reasing for refusal must be disclosed.

If John Plummer is right in his estimate that approximately 70 per cent of those detained under the Immigration Act would be released if the statutory presumption of the Bail Act applied to them, then the hardship which they are suffering and the unnecessary cost to the tax-payer must surely be brought to an end withour delay. Even if his estimate is an exaggeration, there is no justification for tighter restrictions on ball under immigration law than under the general criminal law. Yours faithfully

A testing time for monetarism

From Professor F. A. Hayek, FBA Sir, The question which Professor Pearce (June 5) raises is at the same time so important and so complex that it is hardly possible even to sketch an adequate answer within the same frame. I am still convinced that, as far as economic causation is concerned, the value of money is wholly determined by the magnitude of the supply of money in relation to the demand for holding it. In this sense I agree with Professor Milton Friedman that there is no such thing as a cost-push inflation. But politically it is unfortunately true that by pushing up wages the trade unions can make it "politically necessary" to increase the quantity of money, ie, create a condition in which government believes it must do so.

For this reason I am even con-vinced that trade union reform must precede monetary reform. It is this which makes the former so exceedingly urgent and is the chief reason why in both fields gradualism cannot help. If as I believe to be true, with the present power of the trade unions no government that has the power over the supply of money can politically resist the pressure for more money, the irrently needed termination of inflation cannot succeed before the power of the trade unions is carried. But time is becoming short and it will soon be necessary to proceed on a timesable if the necessary operation is to be completed.

The theoretician must always, and particularly if he lives abroad, hesi-tate to give advice on what must be a political decision. But if this Government within its limited life, is to achieve the salvation of Britain, a radical procedure will soon be essential As I see it, within the time available what is required can be achieved only if the Government, in the near future, obtains through a referendum popular instruction at once to rescand all the special privileges which have been granted to the trade unions by lew, and is then ready immediately afterwards to terminate inflation instantly. Only this can make it possible for the beneficial effects of such a policy to manifest itself some time before the parm of the present Government THE OUT.

From the technical point of view there is no serious difficulty about stopping inflation. As the former chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, Arshur Burns, has recently confirmed in a much noticed lecture, the monetary authority can always stop inflation with little delay. The difficulties are not economic but political and especially applicant of approximate the contract of the contract economic but political and espe-cially problems of government finance. Ending inflation demands mat government is deprived of the recourse to the printing press for financing its expenditure. Govern-ment must balance its budget and I admit that it is not humanly pos-cible to the provernight. sible to do so overnight The central problem thus becomes how government can be offered a period up to two years or so during which it can reduce its expenditure which it can reduce its expenditure so that it will be covered by revenue. But all borrowing in revenue are present would be likely to cause further inflation and impose an unbearable burden.

The only escape I can see is that government obtain the funds which will give it a period during which it can balance its budget by issuing ar chiefly internal loan in terms of an indexed unit called say, "solids". Large amounts could probably be raised cheaply, at perhaps three or even 24 per cent, it a public which no longer knows what to do with its savings were offered such an opportunity. It seems to me that the British Government, perhaps undeservedly, enjoys in the world still a reputation for honesty which may make a first experiment of this sort a great success. The "solids", in terms of which the loan would be issued would have to be defined as, and be redeemable with, so much of a bundle of other currencies as would at the time be required to buy on the world market a "basket" of a wide range of standard inter-nationally traded raw materials in precisely stated quantitative com-binations. Ultimately this unit might become, if necessary, the basis of a new British currency.

Slowness of procedure might the time destroy all chances. If the present rightly directed efforts fail because of delay, it may be the loss of the last chance of a British recovery for generations. It is not too late yet, but it may be soon. Yours faithfully,

F. A. HAYEK. Urachstrasse 27 D-7800 Freiburg (Breisgan), Federal Republic of Germany.

Health hazards of dogs in parks

From Professor A. W. Woodruff Sir, I am happy to tell you that my Sir, I am happy to tell you that the granddaughter, aged 17 months, has been able to walk for five months. She and her parents spent the spring holiday with my wife and me, and I had for the first time the privilege and pleasure of taking her for a walk in our local park. She managed splendidly the 550 yards to the children's playground, but to the children's playground, but on route we had to bypass several specimens of canine facces and, in the playground, she was persuaded with difficulty to avoid the sandpit. On the return journer I course. On the return journey I counted the faecal deposits and found these to number 12, all lying on our direct coute. Moreover, I had to protect her from the advances of protect her from the advances of five dogs, even though our walk took place between 9.30 and 10.30 am. Having delivered her safely to her parents I retraced our footsteps armed with specimen tubes in which I collected five gram samples of soil at intervals of 34 yards measured with reasonable precision and without regard to the proximity or otherwise of faecal deposits. I also took four samples of sand from the sandact the sandoit.

Examination in my laboratory et. the 16 soil specimens has revealed that four contained toxocaral eggs. The four samples of sand contained

There is no such thing as a natural cosystem, an assemblage of plants lying in harmony without change. for there is constant movement and migration of animals; there is no equilibrium, for change is constant.

Many of the forests now being cut down are young, secondary to former clearing; for example, careful study of many sites in Uganda described by explorers in the last century showed a vast increase in trees; only in two instances, by increased human semiement of kniwe sale lake and by concentration of wild animals at the Mur-chison Falls, had the trees diminished. reached, but, on the law, they could have come to no other. It would not be difficult for Parliament, if it so wished to change the law so that future injustices of this kind did not occur. One of the grounds on which the House of Lords based its decision was that profits did not fall within the definition of the "anything" that could be forfeited under the Misuse of Drugs Act. There would be nothing to stop Parliament enacting that not only a tangible thing actually used in the commission of crime should be liable to forfeiture. but also that any profits resulting from the offence should be so subject to confiscation. That principle would not have to be limited to drugs offences.

The other arm of the House of Lord's reasoning is equally amenable to legal reform. The members of the drug gang were charged with conspiracy, but the forfeiture orders referred to a specific Act, under which there had been no convictions. Enacting a broadly defined provision allowing forfeiture of any profits made from any criminal activities should not prove diffiiw lords expressed regret cuit.

There are other ways to ensure that criminals do not prosper financially from their misdeeds. In the "Julie" trial, for instance, it would have been open to the judge to fine the defendants sums equivalent to the proceeds of the crime. On conviction for conspiracy, there is no upper limit to the penalty that can be imposed. Where offences under particular statutes are charged, bowever, maximum fines are specified. Courts also have the power to award compensation to victims of crime, though that would not have been appropriate in the " Julie " case.

Casualties in the war on inflation From Mr A. T. Harrison Sir, I am at present undergoing an experience which is probably for-eign to most readers of The Times. Following an unwise change of employment, I am now unemployed. In the last few days, I have followed some correspondence in your col-umns with a mixture of irritation, amasement, and wry amusement.

Mr William Shepherd roday (June 10) alludes to "a level of tmemployment benefit not much below wage levels in many areas". My salary before my change of employment at the end of 1979 was, I believe, a little above average national sernings. My unen rijened tremvolm amounts to a little more than thirty-three pounds a week. If Mr.
Shepherd is correct in his essertion, I would suggest that the scandel is that "wage levels in many areas are not much above unemployment benefit".

He goes on to suggest that "the majority of people of this country" would be willing to support a plan to end inflation, "even though it involves sacrifices". Perhaps they would. Since it is reasonable to assume that no government could manage the country's affairs with such gross ineptitude that a majority of the population became unemployed it is possible that a majority would eccept the vicarious sacrifice of those who were victims of "reducing manning levels in industry" industry The same cheerfully oblivious stringe to the misery of other people is found in Mr Eldon Griffithe's letter of last week (June 6). He takes issue with Mr Geoffrey Drain of the National and Local Government Officers' Association (Nalgo) for wishing to preserve the living standards of his members. I do not have his letter before me,

From Mr Peter Newell Sir, Your Education Correspondent (June 11) adds to the general sir (June 11) adds to the general art of complacency surrounding the systematic demolition by the Government of the principle of a tree public system of education.

Those who still believe in this principle and work to protect it have already been insulted by a Secretary of State who seems recommend. Secretary of State who seems more concerned with handing out subsidies, under the assisted places scheme to the independent sector than with protecting maintained schools from savage cuts. Now, Mr Mark Carlisle has added further injury by encouraging perents to help pay for essential books and equipment which local education authorities have a statutory duty Under the beading "How parents can fill the school equipment gap for their children", Diana Geddes echoes this encouragement and, like so many commentators and politicians, consistently confuses and politicians, consistently confuses the curs in educapoliticians, consistently confuses two separate issues: the curs in educational spending end the legal duties imposed on local education authorines by the 1944 Education Act. Although LEAs are hard pressed for cash, this does not give them the right to break the law. It is irresponsible, therefore, to suggest that the only alternative for responsible. that the only attendance for percents is to "protest impotently about the cuts" when, in fact, their option is to challenge the legality of their LEAs actions.

Yours faithfully. A. G. TREVENEN JAMES,

Flat 7, 125 Harley Street, W1.

Of course, your Correspondent is in distinguished company—Mr Carlisle appears also to have lost sight, in his eagerness to fulfil pledges to reduce public spending on education, of his duty to see that the law is not broken, and that LEAs continue to provide schools sufficient in number, character and equipment ".

It is quite understandable that perents should want their children's parents should want their disideen's schools to be properly equipped and staffed, but to allow the assintanced sector to become further reliant on voluntary contributions out only lead to even greater inequalities between schools, with the obvious result that those in most need receive the least.

We would urge, therefore, any perent who is asked by a school or parents' organization for a contribution towards the cost of saything which they regard as essential for the education of their children, to challenge their LEA to provide it before they dip into their own pockets and thus help to undermine forther our free? education system. system. The auctioneers also sold seven laves from his famous Persian manuscript of the Shahnantch in 1976 for £785,000. That Houghton also built and filled a library for his Keats and Shelley collection at Harvard underlines his exceptional status as a book collector. He began to collect in the 1930s. This, according to qualified observers, means that thermonuclear bombs of almost limitless size may now be made at relatively low cost. . SIR BILLY BUTLIN Revolution in the British holiday industry

Sir William Butlin, MBE-he preferred to be called Sir Billy Burlin—who created something of a revolution in British holiday habits by his establishment of a chain of holiday camps, died yesterday at his home in Jersey. He was 80. He was chairman and joint

In 1972 the Rank Organisation won control of the holiday camp and leisure group which today owns eight holiday cenres and three hotels. Butlin was a shrewd, ambitious man of business who made a fortune by sporting a pos-sible demand and then satisfying it. In doing so both he and his holiday camps with their red-coated hosts, their magnifi-cent swimming pools, boating lakes, dance halls, pleasure gardens, highly-organized sporting facilities, child care schemes and general climate of fun by the sea, became bousehold

Apart from this, Butlin was a figure of some standing in show business and a generous giver to charitable causes.

The camps with which his name is still associated still draw their millions though after he retired the company's programme was greatly restruc-tured and the working-class mage somewhat modified. As Butlin said in an interview a few years ago: "... now a few years ago: "... now they've been abroad they want a bit of Continental glamour ... bedrooms instead of chalets and not so much organization."

William Edmund Butlin was born in South Africa on Sep-tember 29, 1899. His father kept a cycle shop; his mother was shire baker who used to sell his gingerbread at county fairs.

His parents moved to Canada, and at the sge of 14 Butlin was working in the Toronto branch of Enton's, the famous department store. In 1915 he joined the Canadian Army as a drummer boy, saw service in France, and. returned to Eaton's, this time to the advertising department.

Ambitious for opportunity Butlin persuaded his mother to lend him £10, and promised her that it would put the first bricks in a new castle. With this £10 in his pocket, he headed for Montreal, where he took the opportunity of working his passage on a cattle boat to England, "To work his passage" on a cattle boat to England was no exaggeration of the service required. In the year 1921, he was standing on the quayside at Liverpool, alone, unknown, with £4 12s left out of £10. It was, perhaps, this earlier training that marked him as a stolid, cautious politician, as a man who lacked audacity but JUSTICE WERE to be done. It was not necessary to do so to find out what section 27 meant; indeed it was more likely to distract attention from the real issue. The words of the section spoke for themselves clearly, without resort to extraneous aids.

The relevant offences were con-spiracies at common law to com-mit criminal offences. They were charged as continuous conspiracies over a period of years which terminated before Part I of the Criminal Law Act, 1977, came into force. Had they been entered into or continued thereafter they would have been statutory conspiracies under section 1 of that Act; but that would not in his Lordwin. that would not, in his Lordship's view, have made any difference. The essence of the offence in this class of conspiracy, whether under the 1977 Act or at common law, was an agreement to pursue was an agreement to pursue a course of conduct which, if carried out, would amount to or involve the commission of a criminal offence by one or more of the parties to the agreement.

The usual way in which the prosecution proved the making of the agreement and its continuance on foot was by adducing evidence of "overt acts" by the alleged parties to the agreement from which the court could properly infer the existence of a prior of contemporaneous agreement be. infer the existence of a prior or contemporaneous agreement between them to do the kind of thing that had in fact been done by them. The number of overt acts or instances of conduct that needed to be proved to justify inferring the existence of the agreement which alone constituted the offence with which the accused were charged was a matter for the good judgment of the prosecution; and the need to prove any at all and the need to prove any at all was obviated if the accused, as in the instant cases, pleaded guilty to the conspiracy charge.

With the legal nature of the offence of conspiracy in mind, there were two reasons why the language of section 27(1) did not apply to cases where the relevant offence of which a person had been convicted was conspiracy to commit an offence under the Art. To come within section 27(1) the offence of which the accused had been convicted must be "an offence under this Act.". It was true that an agreement to produce true that an agreement to produce or supply a particular drug, which would be lawful if the Act had not been passed, was made unlawful by the Act where it related to a controlled drug. more extended ambit would inmore extended ambit would in-tolve putting a strained construc-tion on the actual language used, and so far from there being any grounds for duing so, it stemed that if it were attempted to ex-tend the subject matter of orders of forfeiture to choses in action or other intangibles, that would lead to difficulties and uncertainties in application which Parliament could hardly be supposed to have intended to create.

So one limitation on the subject

So one limitation on the subject matter of an order for furfeiture was that it must be something tangible. There was also another: that what was forfeited must be shown to relate to an offence under the Act of which a person had been convicted by or before the court making the order. For the purposes of section 27 one was therefore looking for an offence which was not only an offence under the Act but also was an offence which in its legal nature was of a kind to which something tangible and thus susceptible to forfeiture could be said to "reinte".

That could not properly be said

That could not properly be said of the offence of conspiracy which in its legal nature did not involve any dealing by the offender with anything mingible at all, but con-assed entirely of an unperformed agreement to do so. Whether he performed the agreement or did performed the agreement or did not was irrelevant to the commission of that offence. If the offender did perform it he committed a separate and distinct offence to which something taugible might quite properly be said to "relate"; for that was a verb which in its ordinary meaning had wide connotations. Proof of the commission of one or more such separate and distinct offences might be, and in the absence of a plea of guilty, generally was, relied on as evidence from which the existence of the agreement constituting the con-agreement constituting the con-spiracy was to be inferred. But where, as in the instant cases, the only thange relied on to the only tharge relied on to justify a forfeiture was one of conspiracy, then although those separate and distinct offences which had involved the offencer's actual dealing with something tangible might have been proved in the course of the proceedings, none of them was an offence of which the accused had been considered by or before the court amvicted by or before the court em-powered by section 27 to make the order of forfeiture.

So his Lordship would hold that section 27 did not empower a court to make an order of forfeiture when the only offence of which a person had been convicted by or before it was one of conspiracy to contravene one of the provisions of the Misses the provisions of the Misuse of Drugs Act.

When a court was required to deal with a case of drug trafficking over an extensive period and on a large scale, his Lord-ship appreciated the convenience and saving of public time achieved by including in the indictment a general count of conspiracy to contravene provisions of the Act and limiting the other counts to a few specimen transactions constituting substantive uffences under the Act which could also be relied on as "overt acts" be relied on as "overt acts" from which the existence of the conspiracy could be inferred. Where it was possible to identify something tangible that could fairly be said to relate to any such transaction, such as the drugs involved, apparatus for making them, vehicles used for transporting them, or cash eachy. making them, vehicles used for transporting them, or cash ready to be, or having just been, handed over for them, then if it was desired to forfeit it, the transaction must be made the sub-ject of a charge of the substan-tive offence. There did not seem anything unreasonable in re-quiring that to be done. For-feiture was a penalty; justice re-quired that it should not be gailt.

The courts below in making the order of forfeiture appeared have been influenced by crown's argument that the pareffect was intended to be given by section 27 was to strip drug traffickers of the profits of their crime, whatever way they might have been invested. It was that reason that made them so ready party to any conspiracy) it was and disputed that it would be necessary to connect the specific thing sought to be forfeited with the particular substantive offence to which it related. In such a case it could not plansibly be suggested that the section authorized the court to follow the assets: by such a process of reasoning, for instance, if the offender received £1,000 in cash offender received £1,000 in cash out of the particular transaction of which he was convicted; he paid the cash into his bank account; six months later out of the balance of that account, then standing at £4,500, he bought a car worth £4,000, leaving £500 in the account, the court had therefore jurisdiction to order the forfeiture of either a one-quarter share in the car or a one-eighth share in the car together with the hank's debt to the offender to the amount of £500 standing to his credit in the bank account.

No machinery was provided by his credit in the bank account.

No machinery was provided by section 27 for effecting the assignment of choses in action or creating and realizing the charges on real and personal property which "following the assets" would entail. It was practical considerations of that kind which lent weight to the conclusion based on the ordinary meaning of the actual the ordinary meaning of the actual language of the sections. They made it clear that, in the case of made it clear that, in the case of a sole offender, orders of forfeiture under section 27 could never have been intended by Parliament to serve as a means of stripping the drug traffickers of the total profits of their unlawful enterprises; and the difficulties of using the section for that purpose were but multiplied when the offences were joint; assets in such a case would have to be followed down multiple trails, whether or not the substantive offences were linked by a general conspiracy charge.

conspiracy charge. His Lordship taking the view that there was no jurisdiction to make any order for forfetture in the instant cases, even of tangible things, since the conviction in respect of which the order was made was one of conspiracy and not of any substantive offence, it was not strictly necessary to deal with the jurisdiction to forfeit tangible things situate abroad. Lest, however, it be thought, from the omission to mention it, that the Court of Appeal's view that there was jurisdiction to do that had the approval of the House, his Lordship would record his dissent from it. Under English rules of conflict of laws it was well established that an English court had no jurisdiction, either in a criminal or a civil matter, to make orders purporting ipso jure to transfer movable property abroad. His Lordship taking the view

His Lordship would allow the appeals and discharge the order LORD EDMUND-DAVES, con-curring, said that he too was forced to the most rejuctant con-clusion that the appeals must be allowed and the forfeiture orders discharged.

Lord Russell, Lord Keith and Lord Kussell, Lord Keen and Lord Scarman also agreed with the speech of Lord Diplock, Lord Scarman adding the reservation that in his view it could not properly be said of the offence of coaspiracy that it involved any dealing by the offender with anything tangible at all.

Mr Blom-Cooper applied for an order that the costs of the appeals, in which the appellants were legally aided with all contribu-tions, should be paid out of centrai funds, even tho be putting money from one part of the public purse into another but it seemed appropriate that the Legal Aid Fund should have the credit of the costs. Critical shortage of manpower for US Navy

Lase year the 36,000-ton United States supply vessel Canisteo won the title of navy "supership" for its work re-fuelling warships of the Sixth Fleet in the Mediterranean. This year it has been lying idle at the dockside in Nor-folk, Virginia, unable to put

Although it is 35 years old, the Canisteo is not suffering overly from the symptoms of old age, although its boiler-room needs constant attention. Instead it has become the victim of a growing shortage of skilled manpower in the United States Navy which is now reaching crisis proportions.

when Captain Arthur Fredrickson took charge of the Canisteo, he found that he had only two boiler technicians, six machinist's mates and 12 chief petty officers. Normally it should have been nine boilermen, 13 machinist's mates and 17 chiefs. Under such conditions, Captain Fredrickson fet that the Capitley was upsafe to hat the Canisteo was unsafe to operate—a decision which be communicated to his superiors in Washington,

Captain Fredrickson's message came as no surprise to the navy leadership, although it was the first time that manit was the first time that man-power shortages had led to a ship being made idle. Admiral Thomas Hayward, the Chief of Naval Operations, and his colleagues have been trying to convince the politicians in the White House and Congress for the past year or so that something must be done to improve the situation.

"Only recently has the dechine in total quality of the navy's personnel issue shown up in readiness?, says Admiral Hayward. "You can have a where the impact is dramatic." The figures speak for them-selves. Last year the navy was short of 16,000 skilled men, this year the shortage has risen to 21,000, and next year, if nothing is done to stop what he calls "the haemorrhage of talent", Admiral Hayward believes the shortfall could be as high as 28,000. The net result has been that he Navy is "stretched thinner the Navy is "stretched thinner today than at any time since the late 1940s", Admiral Hayward says. In the Atlantic Fleet, for example, the number of ships with inadequately trained "middle management-level" staff has risen to about 20 now compared with an average of the sevent in recent years. six or seven in recent years.

Even the Indian Ocean Fleet, which has been accorded priority treatment since the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, has fewer highly trained middle-grade supervisors and skilled technicians than the Pentagon would like. The Indian Ocean ships can perform effectively, says a senior naval officer reassur-ingly, "but we are supplying resauvely inexperienced people in place of people who would (in the past) have been grained over four or five means. over four or five years. We are counting on young people taking as much responsibility as they can handle."

Sea pay bonuses range from $25 to $55 a month depending on length of service on board ship. There are other minor irritants, too, like the 50 per cent of moving costs which Navy men find they have to pay out of their own pockets.

This is, of course, all very reminiscent of the debate which raged in Britain a couple of years ago before armed services' pay was increased and, like their British counterments then British counterparts then Admiral Hayward and his colleagues have been trying to make their voices heard above the general clamour for balanced budgets and the like. They accept that they are unlikely to get an across-the-board wage increase of 20 per cent which would cost the federal Government $1,000m or so a year, but they believe they have a sympathetic ear on Capitol Hill for some pay in-creases this year. "There's a

And how do you ger this point across to the politicians and the general public? "Well, you keep surging against the rocks like the tide. You keep reminding people that far from being a loss of money, people represent the soundest investment you can make. Nothing else will work without them", this official says.

Nothwithstanding the problem, however, the leadership goes to considerable lengths, as indeed it must to emphasize that morale in the Indian Ocean Fleet, in particular, is high. Although the large aircraft carriers among the 25 ships in the Gulf area had then been at sea continually for nearly five months, Mr Edward Hidalgo, the Navy Secretary, found a "deep sense of purpose among the crew members to whom he spoke on a recent visit.

The enthusiasm of the new men for their jobs may have been particularly high on that occasion because they were treated to two cans of beer each. Unlike the Royal Navy where aktohol is relatively freely available on board ships it has been banned in the American Navy since the days of prohibition.

The supply of beer, which was the idea of Admiral Hayward, was intended to compensate the men for their long sea trip. No American sailor is believed to have been at sea without shore leave for so long since the end of the Second World War.

An appeal lay to the Lands Tribunal. Members of the local valuation gamel were to be

Lands Tribural. Members of the local valuation panel were to be appointed by the county council. There was no provision that any member of the panel or the clerk should have any legal qualifica-tion. The first question was whether a local valuation court was a court. If it was, it clearly was an inferior court; but was it a court contempt of which the Divisional Court had jurisdiction to punish?

His Lordship considered that when an Acr provided that a court should be constituted, it was a court; and the 1948 Act provided that the court to be constituted should have all the features one associated with a court. He knew of no authority for the view that a tribunal was not a court unless a member or the clerk had legal qualifications. A coroner's court was just one example of court without any such requirement. His Lordship would hold that the functions of a local valuation court, which were the same as those of the previous assessment committees, were administrative and not judicial. He was not prepared to extend the law of contempt by applying it to tribunals or courts discharging, albeit judicially, administrative functions. Though that conclusion still left an area of uncertainty, it would be much diminished.

local valuation court was (1) a court (2) which discharged administrative functions and was not a court of law; (3) consequently, the jurisdiction of the Divisional Court in relation to contempt did not extend to it; (4) that jurisdiction extended only to courts of law; and Order SZ, (4) that jurisdiction extended 52 to courts of law; and Order 52 rule 1 when it referred to ferior courts" must be taken to Lordship would allow the appeal.
Lord Salmon, considering the appeal raised important questions on the preservation of freedom of speech and prevention of contemp of court-sometimes difficult to reconcile-delivered a speech con-curring in allowing the appeal. Lord Edmand Davies, Lord Fraser and Lord Scarman delivered speeches concurring in

The drive to associate fac-tory food with rural freshness has led the grocery industry to devalue words like "farm-house" and "country" so that they have become almost worthless labels like "new" and " best ". A quango that advises the Government about food laws is worried about the trend and seeks reform. The advice has come in a long report from the Food Standards Committee which has decided to campaign against the misuse of BRC Solicitor on grocery labels.

Quango campaigns against misuse of rural cachets processed foods today seems use of words like "country" to be to place them in settings and "farmhouse" to "attract remote as possible from the desired rural cachet if the their origins. If you make some foods to which they apply have thing in a suburban factory, not been produced on what the general public would under-stand to be a farm." the marketing handhooks seem to say, advertise it with fields of ripering corn and a few well-placed "Urrs" and It wants the use of such words to be controlled by a code of practice, a traditional escape route for issues which appear to be insufficiently clear to be capable of being pinned down by law. Such a code would probably lead to the hanning of Heinz Farmhouse Vegetable Soup as a name for a product made in factory and sold in a tin. Manufacturers will doubtless argue that such products are made from ingredients grown

The food standards division of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which advises the committee, was not sure if the Farmer's Table name and design would be banned if the proposals of the committee become law. It said that the matter would have to be decided in the light of the code of about the committee's onelaught on the use of terms like "slimming" and "weight watchers" on grocery labels. The food standards division said at first that the Weight Watchers brand name, used by the Imperial Group on a range of lowthing else almost certainly calorie foods and soft drinks, comes from a factory. What, would be banned if the com-

It then changed its mind, and said that the name would not be banned because it was used as the name of a brand, and not of a food. Just to emphasize the narrowness of the boundary line, the division said that the name of the new Heinz lowcalorie SlimWay mayonnaise probably would be banned if the committee's proposals be-That was because SlimWay was the name of a product and Weight Watchers the name of a company. The committee said in its report to ministers: "Names for foods containing the words 'slim,' 'slender,' 'weight watchers' etc should not be permitted." But if company names are to be permitted, what is to prevent a company which wants to sell a product called "Slim" changing its own name to "Slim" in order to circumvent the law and put the name on The committee's suggestions throw up so many complications that the Government may be tempted to ignore them, as has often been done before. Hugh Clayton

Monopolies reference on Godfrey Davis bid

By Derek Harris mmercial Editor

The planned purchase of Godfrey Davis's short term car rental business by Europear, the Renault subsidiary, was yesterday referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission by Mr John Nott, Secretary of State for Trade.

Dealings in the shares of Godfrey Davis, Britain's largest care hire operators, were temp-orarily suspended at the company's request yesterday but are expected to resume this morning. On suspension the shares stood at 166p.

The boards of both Europear and Godfrey Davis said they would be making submissions to obtain clearance for the proposed deal. The commission has six months in which to report to Mr Nott.

Europear, the continent's largest car rental business with operations in 56 countries, had offered 115p cash for each Godfrey Davis ordinary share, the equivalent of about £17.4m.

Mr Cecil Redfern: deal would be advantageous to Code

There had been fears the bid might be blocked because of in-terest from other interests, including Hertz, Avis and Volks-wagen's rental offshoot, but holders of some 70 per cent of the equity agreed to the Europ-

Overall the deal is worth some £22m because the rest of the Godfrey Davis business would get a £4.6m dividend pay-ment from the short-term hire business. Godfrey Davis, a Ford main dealer whose chairman is Mr Cecil Redtern, would retain its contract hire and leasing business and other activities in mobile homes, caravans and holiday hotels.

It should be an advantageous deal for Godfrey Davis. At February's suspension price of 141p, the £22m value on the disposal was £700,000 more than the entire capitalization of the British group.

A key question is what the implications are of a car maker acquiring such substantial car hire outlets. Godfrey Davis, with a rental fleet estimated at around 10,000 cars, is thought to be well ahead of Avis, its pearest rival.

It would always be open to the commission to recommend that undertakings be given by Europear on any issue which the commission believed might

The phenomenon of irregular or "clandestine" labour in the Italian textile, clothing and footwear industries is growing, and involves 800,000 people, the workers' federation.

A survey by the union con-cluded that, out of nearly three million people doing piece work sectors at home, 600,000 had been taken on without regard to employment regulations. Official employment conditions were also not applied to another 200,000 working in factories, mainly in the Mezzogiorno.

BL ready to reap Honda's Bounty

Honda Bounty car plant at Cowley, Oxfordshire, is going ahead according to schedule, and the new car will be produced from next summer as planned, according to Honda executives in Tokyo.

Conversations with Mr Hirobuni Nakamura, a Honda main board director and a member of the company's European market task force, as well as with Mr Shuko Hayashi, manager of the Japanese car group's international planning office, show that Honda attaches much greater importance to the deal than was first thought.

It is clear that the Cowley cooperation is a third and vital component of the export strategy which Honda will pursue during the 1980s.

Honda newer and smaller than Toyota and Nissan (Datsun), the other two big Japanese car companies, relies much more than them upon export sales, which were as much as two thirds of total production of cars last year.

The Japanese Governmen, and Honda in particular, are extremely worried at pressure in the American market to tax Japanese car imports, as well as by pressure from the EEC ahead of the Venice economic summit for the Japanese voluntarily

Both the Japanese Government and Honda see joint production deals at Cowley with BL as one way of responding to protectionist pressures, Mr Nakamura said it was a "huge" project for Honda and BL.

There are less than two million self-employed people but well over 20 million employees and further millions of economically active students, pensioners, housewives and un-employed. If we, the selfemployed, are entirely responsible for the black economy, then, on Sir William Pile's figures, we are each not declaring £6,000 every year.

This is manifestly not the case and I would contend that the vast bulk of the black economy is run by the moonlighter and not the selfemployed.

Margaret Stone refers to the in-depth tax investigations to which the self-employed are subjected and comments on a "high" success rate of 80 per cent. This figure is grossly inflated by many factors, the main one being that the cost of fighting such an investigation is often more than the amount of tax disputed—hence the trader pays up regardless of

A different way of looking at this figure is to say that it represents a 20 per cent failure rate. If the self-employed failed to deliver the goods 20 per cent of the time they would seen a court of the time they would soon go out of business !

Steeled for bad news, the shares held steady at 47p-a penny above the year's worst-where a yield of more than 12 per cent and p/e ratio of over 8 neatly focus on the investment dilemma.

Long-term this rating could look cheap assuming that car battery demand must recover eventually and given Chloride's potentially exciting developments in the general electronics and battery-powered vehicle field.

But for the time-being cash generated by the ex-growth battery interests is not enough to enable the group to stand still, let alone to supply lifeblood for new developments.

Debt last year spiralled £20m to £93m equivalent to 78 per cent of shareholders' funds, mainly as a result of increased working capital demands caused by the higher lead price. This has settled back recently but given that every £10 increase in the metal price soaks up another £800.000 of capital, attempting to judge the depth of the recession is an even more tense exercise for Chloride's directors than it is for

Hill Samuel

Recovery potential

The results from Hill Samuel hold no surprises. Net profits after transfer to inner reserves are marginally down at £7.7m before extraordinary items.

The non-recurring items include £1.7m of exchange losses on capital assets which could as well have figured in adjustments to reserves and £969,000 of the costs of moving the insurance broking subsidiary to

While banking profits are up by a useful 51 per cent at £6.9m, other major components of the group have fared significantly less well. The worse off is the insurance broking division which reports a loss, before the costs of transfer to Swindon, of £1.5m as against a notional loss of £1 last time. Half of that is mostly non-recurring and dates back to bad debts incurred some years ago when Hill Samuel undertook some re-insurance contracts for which it could not collect the money. The rest is due to poor trading.

Now that the insurance broking side has been completely revemped a significant turnaround is likely, though whether the full £1.5m can be clawed back into profits this time is still a moot point.

Hill Samuel has had a drab performance over the past few years. The question now is whether the new management team headed by Sir Robert Clark and Mr Christopher Castleman, will do better.

On the assumption that that is the case and with some recovery on the way this year, and probably more to come after that, the shares at 94p look good value for the longer term with a yield of nearly 9 per cent an added attraction.

There is also, of course, the possibility of takeover (identified by Merrill Lynch's abortive approach the other day) at much higher levels than the current price.

Will Mr Carter keep his nerve?

The last time the United States experienced a recession in an election year, in 1960, the party in power in the White House was ousted. So President Carter has cause to be anxious as he looks towards polling day in

In fact, the slump could well go far deeper and run for longer than the Admin-The issue now is whether the President will switch horses from anti-inflation policy to economic stimulus. Such a switch could produce the sort of short-term benefits that of short-term benefits that would help him in the cam-paign, but it could also under-mine efforts to secure price stability.

In the past five business downards in America the Government's composite index of leading economic indicators has registered its sharpest falls at least one quarter before the steepest drop in real gross national product. The index is widely viewed as the best statistical guide to the economy's short-term path. Last month the index fell by a record 4.8 per cent.

A severe slump in the third quarter of this year will increase the pressures within the White House for stimulative policies. In April unemployment rose by 1 per cent to 7 per cent and in May by another 0.8 per cent. A similarly large gain this month will send harsh signals into President Carter's oval office.

As it is, Americans are showing increasing signs of strain. Joblessness is severe, especially among urban blacks.

Anary blacks boosd and threw bottles at President Carter's car an Monday when he visited Miami. According to the private New York Conference Board group's latest surveys "the loss of consumer confidence over the record magnitude ".

the consumer's nerve finally gave out. The rapid rise of in-flation in 1979 produced what is now referred to as an "inflation psychology". Americans built up debts and reduced their savings to buy, fearing that goods would be more expensive tomorrow. But the debt burden grew too heavy, the cost of borrowing become too great and inflation started to severely into real incomes.

The recession started when it will never forget Americans decided to reject Decroit's petrol guzzlers for fuel-efficient German and Japa-nese cars. The housing industry went into a tailspin as interest rates rose and many mortgage lenders decided to close shop and leave for the Florida sun until interest gate sanity was restored.

Fortunately, retailers and wholesalers had long expected a slowdown in consumer The spending boom seems to have largely exhausted itself by January. But the picture was not so clear in March and it was partly the fear of the inflation psychology running mad, pushing up inflation rates substantially, that prompted the Federal Reserve Board to impose credit controls on March 14. The controls crushed the spending bonanza that had, in fact, siready started to run out spending bonanze that had, in suggesting that the slower will fact, stready started to run out still go deeper.

many manufacturers to review their plans for purchasing plant and equipment. The Commerce Department's latest survey, published on Tuesday, suggests that business spending this year will rise by 9.9 per cent. The last survey, raken in March, showed an expected 11.1 per cent rise.

It seems likely that the coming months will see the recession broaden from the consumer through all sectors of the according. The Federal Reserve, for the moment any way, does not seem willing to ease its policies and greatly increase the level of bank reserves. It is unlikely to bow to political pressures in the effort term and it is to the White House and Congress that people must look for new several points were due to the price rises introduced by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries late in 1979 and several more reflected the rising costs, thanks to interest rates, of home financing.

Now the interest rate and Oper shocks have partially been digested and consumer prices are rising by a more modest amount. Substantial wage rises and food and other price increases will ensure that the inflation rate will hover around 10 to 12 per cent for most of the rest of this year. If there are no new stimulative measures and no oil price shocks the rate could be in single figures as 1981 starts.

But stimulative action by the Carter Administration could easily unleash a new bour of "inflation psychology". A big tax cut proposed by the White House and adopted by Congress could convince foreigners that the United States is not serious about fighting inflation, the dollar could fall and this would simply mean even higher American inflation to come. Many Americans, seeing yet another huge budget deficit emerging, could also go back to their high spending habits and so drive prices up.

So far the Administration is saving and doing the right things. It is fighting for a fight budget and protesting even more loudly that there will not more loudly that there will not be any imminent tex cuts. But increasingly there is talk in Washington of how the Fed ought, perhaps, to ease its poli-cies and how, perhaps, a $16.000m to $24,000m tax cut in September or October might be useful.

Time and again the record of the Carter Administration has been one of following the been one of tollowing the opinion polls, acting when it looked as if short-term political popularity could be won and ignoring longer-term matters. On the basis of that record the possibility that the recession could lead the White House on to a stimulative binge cannot be ignored,

How two big radar orders went abroad

Five months ago a leading operation is the same for both British electronics company military and civil radars, in gave warning that two important United Kingdom rader orders were likely to be lost to foreign competition. This prediction has proved as accurate as the rader hardware itself was required to be for the hostile. as the ladar naraware tasks was required to be, for the hostile intruders have indeed penetrated the defences of the indigenous industry to reach their targets in the United Kingdom market.
At the beginning of May the Civil Aviation Authority au-nounced a £9.7m contract for air traffic control radar with Hollandse Signeal Apparaten, a subsidiary of the Dutch Philips group. Last week the Ministry of Defence confirmed that two transportable, "three-dimentransportable, "three-dimensional" radars for Royal Air Force stations at Buchan and Benbecula in Scotland, are to be supplied by General Electric of the United States.

The technology that translates the reality of aircraft in the sky into blips on a small screen is a demanding and complicated business. Lacking the glamour of the more spectacular examples of microelectronics, radar none the lass combines advanced microcircuitry with heavy engineering; advanced computer-based processing with high-rower electrics.

There are two types of radar, known respectively as primary and secondary. In primary radar, pulses of electromagnetic energy are sent out by a trans-mitter and reflected echoes from the aircraft are received back at the radar station. These are processed to give the pic-ture on the screen and the pre-cise details of sircraft position

In secondary radar, a device known as a transponder on hoard the aircraft responds by transmitting coded pulses which give additional information such as the identity and beight of Though the principle of

In defence radar, the aim is to bring the blips together—to effect an interception between the attacking and the defending aircraft. The garden is heavily imbued with religious overtones which seem to conflict somewhat with the stories about Presley's riotous private life and the fact that his death was partly due to mixing a large quantity of drugs.

Lubiani is predictably dismissive of such comments. "I believe the man was a product of his own environment." Which was, of course, Memphis, where the young Presley cut his first record for the legendary Sun Studios and founded a huge fortune which he bequeathed to his daughter, now in her teens and biving in

The city council plan would have removed one of the causes of annovance to the fans : the mansion remains locked and inaccessible. Those who trespass on the private drive risk having their cameras and film seized never to be returned.

The city fathers offered $11.7m which, considering that Presley paid $100,000 for the place in the late fifties, represents a pretty reasonable But the answer from the family was a swift refusel.

Such serbacks do not deter the likes of Eddie Lubiani. Next year Lubiani and associates are organizing a Presley convention. In order to win support for his convention, Lubiani is going round pouring cold water on this year's convention. Elvis Expo 80, with which he is not associated.
"These guys (the Elvis Expo

"It's the poor people who

One thing he does not seek to hide is that Memphis remains slightly surprised at the continuing interest in its most widely-known son. "Actually, until he died we never Presiev's memory extends to the second most memorable aspect of Memphis, the hotel chain founded by local builder and regular churchgoer Kemmons Wilson in 1952. Staveley finishes at £7.3m after dismal first half Pretax profits at Staveley Industries dived from £5.43m to £1.53m in the first six months, catching both the Staveley management and the market off balance. But in the full year to March 31 pretax profits were £7.3m against £11.25m, a fall of only 35 per cent.

Having fallen so unexpectedly once, Staveley is shy of counting the stones in its path now. But at least £10m for this year seems possible.

If all goes reasonably, Dr Adolph Frankel, the chairman, should be able to buy a company or two in the coming months because the group finished the last trading year with a debt of only 31.2 per cent of shareholders' funds, virtually the same as the year before. Asset value a share rose from 285p to 292p.

mineral products account for only £26.7m, but this category is far the largest trading profit contributor with £6m against £4.97m. (The total was £10.28m).

Management attributes the progress to successful cost cutting after installation of new plant. North American profits also rose well, from £669,000 to £1.56m, thanks to acquisitions. Everything else fel in varying degrees.

This year Staveley's luck shoudl change. Last year electrical and mechanical services plunged, but only because of a bad debt from a Middle East-ern customer. The skide into loss in foundries reflected steel and engineering troubles and plant closures, while machine tools could not buck an industry downtrend. Confidence is indicated by

B & C Shipping meets forecast

The British & Commonwealth Shipping figures for 1979, fore-cast last November, can hardly be caused exciting. Not sur prisingly, the final dividend is 7p net as indicated, and pretax profits do indeed approximate to those of 1978 at £28.64m against £28.88m.

Only the subtraction of £2.29m from the 1978 figure reflecting exceptional currency loan losses of an associate (expensive borrowing in foreign currencies by Overseas Con-tainers Limited) allows profits before tax to be stated as £28.64m against £26.59m.

For this year too the forecast is one of marking rime. It is hoped that profits "will not be too far different from the year Since March he has been under review However, the market was comforted enough to raise

B & C shares 2p to 300p.

Valor forecasts tough year after an 18pc increase

By Peter Wilson-Smith Valor, the gas appliance maker, beat market expectations with an 18 per cent in-crease in profits to £2.52m before tax in the year to March 31. But demand fell off sharply in the second half and the majority of the group's United Kingdom employees are now on short time working.

Mr Michael Montague, chairman, said that consumer demand in the year ahead was expected to be weak and Valor would not escape the trend. He said: "I am hopeful we will be able to maintain our posi-tion," but emphasized that this was not a forecast.

Valor's main business is in domestic gas heaters and cook-ers, which account for twothirds of sales and profits. Production was hit by the national engineering dispute and the steel strike, while a moratorium on gas appliance advertising from last September by British Gas, also depressed demand.

Four-fifths of Valor's appliances are sold through British Gas shows the sold through British

Valor has increased the final dividend by 32 per cent to 2.70p gross after adjusting for last year's one-for-five scrip issue. This leaves the year's total up by 26 per cent to 3.80p gross. At the uet level the dividend was covered 6.6 times by several of the dividend. Gas showrooms and at one point At the net level the dividend weekly sales were halved. Steel strike takes its toll of Aurora

In the early months of this year Aurora Holdings was severely affected by the steel strike, Mr Robert Atkinson, the chairman, told the annual meeting. The current level of order totake in steel and engineering industries was low, but prompt action to reduce lebour and overhead costs in line with the present and forecast levels of activity had been raken. The board was specifically concen-trating on the reduction of gear-ing. It was also in the middle of a major rationalization at the

sees profit rise

At the annual general meeting of Provincial Laundries, the chairman said that "since the beginning of the year the programme of organic and acquisitional expansion had been accelerated". The result was that the turnover of the company was increased from the £3m reported in 1979, to an expected £10m for 1980. As a consequence, a "significant increase in pre-tax profits is expected".

MAM goes into fast-food business

Management Agency and Music thes entered the fast-food catering business by signing a franchise agreement with Burger King. Over a five-year period at least 16 restaurants will be opened, and the project anticipates a total investment of over 16m. of over £6m.
The first restaurant should be open in the London area this year, with several more scheduled for 1981. Burger King is the trademark Burger King Corporation of the United States. Two company-owned restaurants are currently operating in London, where turnover increased by 30 per cent lest year.

Thomas French under pressure

Although the year bas started with a rise in first-half taxable profits from £775,000 to E926,000, at Thomas French and Sons, the board says that it will be difficult to match last year's record full-year results.

Demand began to weaken beersupping become market. This depresses margins to a level which cannot cover rising costs currently being experienced in the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland.

The interim is raised from 1.4p to 2p gross and the board hopes to pay no less than last year's total of 4.5p.

No Twinlock dividend

a major rationalization at the steel division.

These factors make it winlock for the year to February 29, against a gross payment of 0.84p. Pre-tax jrofits of this filing system group collepsed from £1.42m to £201,000—a "disappointing" outcome says Mr A. K. L. Stephenson, the chairman.

The group, which has an overthe counter share quotation, has hit hard by unofficial industrial action at its distribution complex. This made for a loss of £241,000 at half time.

At the operating level profits in the second half reached £1.09m. However, interest charges took over £1.3m for the

Henry Denny loss in first half

Akthough turnover for the half year to March 29 rose from £14.4m to £16.15m, Henry Denny and Sons made a pretax loss of £50,000 against a profit of £289,000.

Trading conditions during the period were extremely difficult.
The board sees no prospects of a dramatic turn-round in the second half, while the cost of pigs continues to be unrelated to realizations achievable in an over-supplied bacon market. This depresses margins to a

BL last in table of breakdowns

A survey from West Germany on breakdown rates among new cars suggests that the best way to avoid trouble is to buy a Japanese model or, failing that, a German one. In a league table of 21 makes, the top 11 were Japanese or German, with poor BL in last place.

The survey was made by the Allgemeiner Deutscher Automobil Club, the German equivalent of the Automobile Association, and was based on an analysis of breakdown calls to its roadside service. The cars concerned were all registered last year.

Five of the six makes recording the fewest breakdowns were Japanese, headed by Mitsubishi (whose cars are sold in Britain under the Colt badge) with only 3.9 breakdowns per 1,000 registra-tions. The other Japanese makes, in descending order of reliability. were Honda, Mazda, Toyota and

Mercedes-Benz was third in the list and after the Japanese came

five more German makes: Volks-wagen, Opel, Ford, Audi and BMW. Ford is included as a German car because most Fords sold in Germany are made there. Renault, Fiat and Talbot came next, with Volvo and Peugeot, perhaps surprisingly, after them. Citroen, Alfa Romeo, Porsche, another surprisingly poor showing, and Lada were among the most breakdown-prope cars, with propping up all the others with the melancholy record of 38.3 breakdowns for every 1,000 new cars registered. The figures for 1978 show roughly the same picture, though Mercedes-Benz was top, followed by Mitsubishi, Volkswagen and Opel. Porsche, Peugeot, Citroen, Alfa Romeo and Lada were again at the bottom of the list, with BL once more taking the wooden spoon. These findings must, of course, be treated with care. They are derived from an arbitrary sample (what of those breakdowns not re-ported to the club?) and in some cases a very small one. But they do seem to confirm the high reputation for reliability enjoyed by Japanese cars, which, perhaps for that very reason, have been taking an increasing share of the German market.

The club's roadside service dealt with 920,000 calls last year, of which more than 100,000 were for mechanical failures in cars less than two years old. It comments tartly: "Much of the trouble can be avoided if car manufacturers would learn from the mistakes of the past " There has been no exactly com-parable survey in Britain, though the Automobile Association did analyse a sample of breakdown calls received by its patrols last year. Unlike the German exercise, cars of all ages were lumped together and the results were related to ownership of the marque by AA members.

On such a basis, BL came out no worse, indeed slightly better, then other makes. Though BL vehicles accounted for 33 per cent of the breakdowns, they are owned by 35 per cent of AA members. Ford, on the other hand, contributed 23 per cent of the breakdowns with a 21 per cent ownership and Vauxhall 12 per cent breakdowns with 9 per cent ownership.

Foreign cars as a whole did better than British, being owned by 27 per cent of AA members, but account-ing for 22 per cent of breakdowns. Among leading foreign makes, Renault, Volkswagen and Datsun had fewer breakdowns in proportion to ownership and Fiat more.

Again these figures may or may not be significant. With a membership of more than five million, the AA can claim a good cross section of British motorists, although, as with the German survey, some of the individual samples were inevitably small. The fact is that the reliability of cars is notoriously difficult to measure and even if a broad agreement does emerge, this is no guarantee that a particular vehicle will behave itself. There are bad Japanese cars just as there are bad BL cars. Yet I suspect that most motorists would rather be told a reliability rating than the drag coefficient or even the 0 to 60 mph acceleration time.

Talbot Solara SX

The first new car to emerge since Chrysler changed its name to Talbot is really an old car with a boot added, but it is none the worse for that. The Solara is a clever piece of styling, closely following the lines of its parent model, the Alpine. It is only three inches longer, but manages to look quite different. Distinctive enough. tainly, to turn a few heads while it was parked in my drive. The extra length has been used to convert the hatchback Alpine into a "three box" saloon thus giving Talbot a medium range com-petitor to the Ford Cortina and Vauxhall Cavalier. It has to be said that the Solara's boot capacity of just over 10 cubic feet is rather modest for a car of this size, but there is ample room for five people inside except that tall rear seat passengers may find their heads brushing the roof.

Mechanically, the Solara follows the Alpine's transverse engine, front-wheel drive layout and uses the same 1.3 and 1.6 litre power units, the latter available in 72 and 87 bhp versions. There is a choice of four and five-speed manual gearboxes and a three-speed automatic transmission and the suspension is all independent.

have been driving the Solara in its most luxurious form: the SX, which costs £6,370 and has, among other standard items, automatic transmission, power steering electric windows, central locking, a cruise control and that impressive trip computer which Chrysler (as Talbot then was) pioneered on the

Approximately the SX uses the more powerful 1.6 litre engine, but performance seems to have been somewhat blunted by the automatic box. The car was not as brisk through the gears as manual Alpines I have driven: once "wound up", nowever, it felt lively enough with the kickdown to bring in extra power for overtaking. Fuel con-sumption, again, is not as good as on the manual cars, but 28 to 33

mpg is still an excellent return. In its handling the Solara has much of the flavour of a French car, which the Alpine originally was. Soft, long travel suspension helps to produce noticeable bodyroll and understeer when cornering, allied though with good roadholding. The power steering removes the heaviness apparent on the Alpine, but not the hint of vagueness. Again in the French style, the Solara is a comfortable car, with soft and well shaped seats: the ride quality, however, is a little disappointing and the suspension does not cope with broken surfaces as well as a Renault or a Citroen. Also disappointing is the level of interior noise, both from the engine and, at speed, from wind. In a car at this price it should be easier to bear the radio at 70 mph.

A further criticism is that as on too many cars the ventilation system is inadequate to cope with muggy weather and I was glad to have a sunroof (not, however, part of the SX's standard specification). Full marks for the clear and nonreflecting instruments, which are a model of their kind.

The trip computer is a splendid idea, providing endiess fascination for small boys as well as a serious contribution to economic driving A neat little panel tells the driver during the journey how much f he has consumed, distance travel and, most valuably, everage f consumption. It is instructive see how much a light foot improve the last figure even o chairman of the Christian Democrat deputies, which is an influential position, its credibility with the public candidate. He was not then well known although he was evidently popular with his parliamentary colleagues.

A year ago he was elected Despite all the clamour for new faces, there was a good deal of shock, and even resentment, that an unknown with almost no apparatus of his own inside the party should have defeated the machine's man This reaction says a lot about, but not for, the state of Italian politics.

News for the home: an ice-making machine

The first domestic ice-making machine is born.
It is the ACM25 and is exclusive to Frimont-Scotaman, Milan (Italy). The machine provides crystal olear los and, because the los is devoid of calcareous deposits, it is purer than the water used to produce it.

The ACM25 is functional, takes up little space (38 x 36 x 84 cm) and can be placed sauly in any space: in the kitchen, office booksheves, next to the bar in the living room.

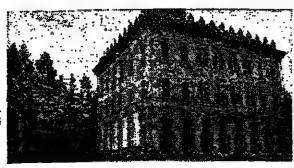

The ACM25 produces 10 kilos of ics per day. Approximately 180 cabes, that is three and a half kilos of ice, are slways available connections for water aupply; only an hour after it has been "filled up" with water (with a handy jug which comes with the machine) the first cubes of ice are ready. The so-called "cubes" have, to be truthful, a special, original and amusing shape; furtherware, they do not stick to each other and are long-tasting.

The ACM25 stops ice production if the ice is not removed, and steris again sutomatically as soon as ice is taken away. The exclusive manufacturing avalent, which guarantees the crystal quality of Scotleman loe, is patented all over the world. The ACM25 is born for the home; it is just so useful in the office, in clubs, in small communities and in pleasure

Rapid industrielization has taken place in Pugha, the heel of Italy, while Sicily has become very active in the field of petroleum refining and primary chemical production. Petrochemicals are also important in Sar dinia, together with lead and ring mining; six main industrial development areas have been designated on the island.
